PHOTOGRAPHER GARY DISCOVERS HIS PASSION LATE IN LIFE

By KATIE SEWELL
newsdesk@essexlive.news
@EssexLive

PHOTOGRAPHER Gary Nicholls thinks it's never too late to find your passion in life.

"Go for it," he says. "What I would say is, age isn't a barrier at all to anything you want to do... go and do it now - and be selfish about it."

Gary is one of the UK's most respected steampunk fine art photographers, and will be coming to Harlow to demonstrate first-hand how he brings his art to life.

Now nearly 60, he discovered his love for photography later in life. His genre is steampunk - a branch of science fiction inspired by steam-powered machinery from the 19th century.

It's an artistic theme used in films such as The League of Extraordinary Gentlemen, and was also used in London's Paralympics closing ceremony in 2012.

The photographer was born in Rochford but lived in Southend until the age of 18, where he attended Southend Technical College.

He attended art classes at night school, and went on to teach design technology at a secondary school. Although he discovered his passion for photography later in life, Gary was exposed to the art from a young age.

His father was a member of the Leigh-on-Sea Camera Club and he received his first camera at the age of four.

It wasn't until 2012 when he attended the Asylum Steampunk Festival in Lincoln - the largest steampunk festival in the world

- that he realised his creative calling. To date he has had exhibitions in Germany, Belgium, Glasgow and Dublin, and has been invited to speak at numerous events across the UK.

Essex, however, holds a special place in his heart. "In Essex, in particular, they listen," he said. "I want to inspire people to at least try, the worst that can happen is you'll learn something."

Age isn't a barrier at all to anything you want to do - and be selfish about it

Gary Nicholls

Gary will be giving a talk at the Harlow Photographic Society on Thursday, January 24, to be hosted at the Moot House at The Stow.

The visit will be the photographer's third visit to Harlow, and all are welcome to come along.

The artist will be discussing his recent work, The Imaginarium, which was inspired by the imaginariums of Victorian-era England, which were places people would visit to be shocked and amazed by the spectacles on display. The first volume of The Imaginarium trilogy, Eva's Story, tells the tale of a girl on a journey from ruin to salvation, through 150 fine art images.

The talk will also involve a studio demonstration of how he creates his images, and he will be coaching the audience on how he edits his work.

Gary, an ex-teacher, added: "With me it's much more about how I do it, and why I do it, so you can actually go away and try it for yourself."

'My wife had an epileptic fit after falling on damaged pavement'

COUNCIL BLASTED FOR NOT REPAIRING SURFACE

The unrepaired pavement near Mr Morris's home

By JAMES GREGORY

james.gregory@reachplc.com
@jgregorynews

A HUSBAND has slammed a council after claiming his wife suffered an epileptic fit when she fell into a cracked pavement that hadn't been repaired.

Colin Morris, of Clover Field in Harlow, says the path on Commons Road, the adjacent road, is not safe for residents to walk on after the incident is alleged to have happened last month.

Mr Morris and his wife, who did not wish to be named, parked up their car next to the cracked path, but because it was late at night could not see the damage until it was too late.

"I could not park outside my home and it was dark and I forgot about the pavement," said the 53-year-old.

"My wife got out of the car, she fell over and gashed her leg. She put her foot right in it - I helped her inside and she had an epileptic fit."

Cracked pavements and potholes fall under the responsibility of Essex Highways, a partnership between Ringway Jacobs and Essex County Council.

The highways team carries out inspections of the roads and prioritises the repairs it makes.

Mr Morris claims the issue was raised with Essex Highways in June 2018, and again after the recent incident, but the engineers did not timetable a response time to repair it, because it was not considered serious enough.

He added: "I have asked the council for six months - they have said the subcontractors have looked at it and deemed it low priority. It seems that until someone actually seriously hurts themselves they will not repair it."

A spokesperson for Essex County Council said: "We are very sorry to hear about this woman's accident and hope she makes a full recovery."

"There are a few cracks in the pavement surface in the area, but we haven't found any urgent issues to date."

"We re-inspect all sites where people report an accident. Our inspector will check the situation and if necessary make any repairs."

"We would encourage residents to report any new problems or issues that get any worse online at essex.gov.uk/highways."

HOW ESSEX IS BUCKING THE NATIONAL TREND

THE latest RAC Index showed the number of reported potholes has risen by 44 per cent across England, Scotland and Wales between 2015 and 2017, with more than half a million being reported across the country.

However, Essex bucks the trend compared to the national scene. The data showed that there were 15,085 potholes reported in Essex in 2015.

Compare that to 2017 and there were only 8,237 road defects reported - a 45 per cent decrease over two years. Councillor Kevin Bentley,

Deputy Leader and Cabinet Member for Infrastructure at Essex County Council, said: "This is fantastic news for Essex and testament to the hard work of our highways crews over the past few years."

"The report shows that Essex has bucked the national trend with a 45 per cent decrease over the last two years in the number of potholes reported."

"The numbers speak for themselves and I'm proud of the progress we've made."

"We are not complacent however, we know there is more work to be done. This year we welcomed an additional £11 million funding from the Government and are using this to trial new approaches to fix even more potholes across the network."

"We've already seen an extra 3,000 potholes fixed since the end of October and 250 miles of Essex roads resurfaced this year as a result."

"While budget constraints on road maintenance will remain very tight, the work carried out this year means we are in a favourable position heading into 2019 and I feel confident that the network will be able to cope should we be faced with more extreme weather like we experienced earlier this year."

"I'd like to encourage local people to help us improve our roads even further, by continuing to report potholes in their area online via our website."

MARTINE XERRI

'Vulnerable will be worst hit by bus service cuts' says Labour

By JAMES GREGORY

james.gregory@reachplc.com
@jgregorynews

CUTS to bus routes across Harlow will "hit the vulnerable the hardest".

That's according to Labour's parliamentary candidate Laura McAlpine, who criticised the proposed Essex County Council (ECC) cuts to evening and Sunday services.

The council launched a consultation on December 19, to review whether some subsidised services should be cut.

It is part of ECC's plans to "reinvent" the service across the county and focus money on other areas which may need it more.

For Harlow, Arriva bus routes one, two, four, six, eight and ten will be affected, as well as other buses coming into the town.

The proposed cuts are only for buses after 10pm and on Sundays and bank holidays.

Ms McAlpine said: "Yet again Harlow will suffer because of the bad decisions made by Essex County Council and the cuts from this Conservative government."

The plans suggested in the consultation will have a very bad effect on our passengers.

"We are already served by an overpriced, unreliable service."

"ECC should look at how it can make our bus services more efficient – the answer is not to cut them."

"Since the deregulation and privatisation of our bus services, our fares have increased and our routes have been cut.

"The Government will not allow local councils like Harlow to establish our own publicly run services, so the alternative is the relentless cutting and reduction of so many vital routes."

She said the "most vulnerable" will be hit the hardest.

"Social isolation is a big problem in Harlow and unfortunately, the cutting of these routes will only add to that problem," she added.

"Essex County Council is obsessed with cutting vital services – three of Harlow's five libraries are under attack and now many will be left without a bus service."

"I would encourage as many people in Harlow and across Essex to take part in the consultation."

There are currently 37 local bus operators which run around 85 per cent of the bus network in Essex, from large companies to smaller, family-run businesses.

The remaining 15 per cent of services are not commercially viable and are therefore subsidised by the county council.

The council says these subsidised services may not be providing the best value for money and a review will now take place to decide whether they should continue in their current form or scrapped.

It also says continued financial pressure means that unless it changes its outlook towards the service, it will not succeed in delivering an adequate bus network for Essex.

Councillor Ray Gooding, cabinet member on ECC, said: "We have a strong record of supporting local bus services particularly in comparison with other local transport authorities who have significantly reduced the level of support that they offer."

"At present, we spend around £9 million of taxpayers' money on these services each year."

"However, with the number of passengers in some cases falling below six per journey, coupled with strong financial pressure on all local government funding, means that we have to look very carefully at how we provide our services to ensure that the limited funding available is focused where it will do most good and where the local communities need it."

An Essex County Council spokesperson added: "The consultation into local bus services is looking at how important evening and Sunday services are to the county's residents. With low passenger numbers on some services the council wants to understand how residents are using local bus services and explore how we might develop the right type of service to meet the travel needs of residents and visitors."

"No decisions have been made on the future of these services therefore we would encourage residents to have their say by completing the consultation at essex.gov.uk/local-bus-consultation or over the phone by calling 03457 430 430."

"Paper versions are also available to collect from all libraries and on request by e-mailing passenger.transport@essex.gov.uk."

Popular beauty spot to get a new year spruce up and be 'a place to be proud of once again'

HARLOW Council has announced plans for the restoration of one of the town's tranquil beauty spots and fishing facilities.

The much-loved and iconic Netteswell Pond, off Second Avenue, is to be restored this year with funding from Harlow Council and Essex County Council.

The project follows the similar restoration over the last two years of another

HARLOW COUNCIL ANNOUNCES RESTORATION WORK WILL TAKE PLACE AT NETTESWELL POND

of Harlow's beauty spots at Oakwood Pond.

Councillor Danny Purton, Harlow Council Portfolio Holder for Environment, said: "I am delighted that at the beginning of the new year we can announce this new project to bring life back to one of Harlow's iconic pond areas.

"The pond holds fond memories for local people and it should become a place to be proud of once again so new memories can be created for local families.

"I know residents will agree that this area is in need of some TLC to create a pleasant environment where families and local people can relax and play."

Starting this month the project will move fast so there is as little disturbance to wildlife as possible, particularly the fishing stock.

The restoration will include cutting back large willow trees, which are in danger of collapsing into the pond.

Scrub and brambles that have been overwhelming the pond area over the past decade will be also be cut back.

The pond will be drained and desilted, with clearance of excess reeds from areas that have become increasingly congested.

A renewed sluice will also see the water-holding capacity of the pond greatly increased.

The current stock of fish will be removed and safely stored in holding tanks during the works and will be returned when water levels are restored. It is anticipated that fishing will return in early summer.

The project has been made possible thanks to funding from both Harlow Council's flood protection budget and Essex County Council's Community Flood Improvement Fund.

The work will be carried out by staff from the council and HTS, specialised contractors and local volunteers.

WHAT ELSE IS BEING DONE?

ALL of this work is also being carried out:

- Rebuilding the fishing platforms;
- Renewal of old broken benches and replacement of litter bins;
- Installation of new signage highlighting the wildlife that can be found in the area and guidance on fishing rules;
- Rebuilding the island in the middle of the pond, providing opportunities for ducks to nest;
- Establishment of new and colourful marginal plants.

Plan for 1,000 homes slammed

By JAMES GREGORYjames.gregory@reachplc.com
@jgregorynews

A DEVELOPMENT of almost 1,000 new homes and a new school in Harlow has been criticised after it was revealed it could become larger than expected.

An application to build 592 homes, which form part of the wider Gilden Way development in Harlow, will go before the council's planning committee next week.

The development, submitted by Persimmon Homes in tandem with Barrat North Thomas and Taylor Wimpey, contains a green space that will run the width of the developed land known as Linear Park.

The newly submitted proposals, will replace the already approved plans to build 449 dwellings on land to the north of the park and would also provide an additional 43

affordable units.

If approved, it means the overall development will consist of 1,054 homes - representing an increase of 143 houses.

Construction has already started on 462 of the 911 currently approved homes to the south of the park.

The scheme is being recommended for approval by the council because it would "provide significant additional benefits for relatively limited changes to the approved scheme, including the provision of 43 additional affordable units.

"The scheme will also provide uplifted contributions towards education provision, libraries and healthcare," adds the council report.

But it has been met with criticism from residents who feel that this is an overdevelopment of the site and there could be a greater strain on infrastructure.

The matter will be decided at a development management committee meeting on Harlow District Council next Wednesday.

This view could be different in the future if the application is approved

Bid to stop 23,000 homes being built in countryside

PETITION CALLS FOR GARDEN TOWN PLANS TO BE RECONSIDERED

By JAMES GREGORY

james.gregory@reachplc.com
@jgregorynews

A PETITION has been launched to thwart a scheme which would see 23,000 new homes built on greenbelt and farmland in Hertfordshire and Essex.

The Harlow and Gilston Town project vision was approved by Harlow, Epping and East Herts councils at their respective cabinet and executive meetings in December.

Its aim is to end the housing shortage problem in the area.

The document will now go to the Garden Town Member Board on February 4 for endorsement.

It was agreed by the board back in November that each local authority should have a say on the vision document.

The document will be used to prepare final masterplans for the garden town and help to access planning applications for the sites.

The ambitious plan will see new neighbourhoods established to the east, west (Water Lane) and south (Latton Priory) of Harlow, along with seven new villages to the north known as the Gilston Villages.

New homes will also be built within Harlow itself.

The Garden Town area will provide for 16,000 new homes up to 2033, of which 3,000 will be in the Gilston area. The remaining 7,000 new homes are planned for Gilston after 2033.

Advocates for the scheme say that the severe level of housing need represents 'exceptional circumstances' for development on green belt land. But critics argue that the development will result in a loss of important farmland and open spaces.

A petition has been sent to all three councils urging councillors to reconsider the initiative after it was approved last month.

It reads: "Some of the open green spaces and play areas within the town will be lost. The town will become a part of the London-Cambridge megalopolis."

"Most of the new housing is unlikely to be social housing."

"The argument for the expansion is that Britain needs to infinitely expand its economy (and so its workforce, which will need more housing), and to be competitive in the world market; and to support an ageing population in retirement."

"However, Britain is the fifth richest country in the world, and can surely afford to look after the people who created that wealth in their old age."

"Britain only has enough land to produce 60 per cent of the food we need, and needs to save its farmland from being built over. The drive to build on green farmland is happening all over the country and is being challenged wherever it is planned."

You can find the petition on change.org.

Professor Tony Young

University's director of medical innovation honoured by Queen

By ALISTAIR RYDER

alistairryder@reachplc.com
@AlistairCN

ANGLIA Ruskin University's director of medical innovation has been awarded an OBE.

Professor Tony Young joined the university in 2010, and juggles his role with being a consultant urological surgeon at Southend University Hospital NHS Trust.

He was appointed as the first ever National Clinical Director for Innovation for the NHS in England in 2014 and went on to found the NHS Clinical Entrepreneur Programme in 2015.

During his time at Anglia Ruskin, Professor Young has been instrumental in driving support for the creation of the MedBic Business Innovation Centre on Anglia Ruskin's Chelmsford campus, and a new innovation centre in Harlow.

He said: "When I started at Anglia Ruskin University I never imagined that my country would recognise the work I do as notable with such an award. I feel very honoured and humbled. These things are a recognition of the great teams I work with as much as a recognition of any individual."

"Anglia Ruskin University have not only supported me to grow and develop as a professional, but have driven the healthcare innovation and enterprise agenda nationally. They are founding partners of the NHS England Clinical Entrepreneur programme, which has grown to become the world's largest entrepreneurial training programme in health and we should be very proud of that. This award is also a great acknowledgement that innovation and entrepreneurship can help us address some of the challenges we face in healthcare and Anglia Ruskin is at the vanguard."

Professor Roderick Watkins, acting vice-chancellor of Anglia Ruskin, said: "We are very proud to have Tony here at Anglia Ruskin."

"He is absolutely dedicated to improving the lives of patients through the use of pioneering medical technology, and his determination and leadership are having a significant impact across the NHS and beyond."

"His OBE is a reflection of his success as both a leader and a clinician and it is fantastic opportunity for our medical students to be able to work with him and be inspired to become the medical entrepreneurs of the future."

Why the weight? Sign up to Slimming World now and get rid of those extra pounds

MISSION TO HELP MEMBERS ACHIEVE THEIR DREAMS CELEBRATES GOLDEN YEAR

IF you'd love to slim down and feel better about yourself this January, Harlow Slimming World groups are inviting you to join them and go for gold with your weight loss in 2019.

This New Year marks 50 years since the very first Slimming World group opened its doors and Slimming World groups in Harlow are looking forward to celebrating the golden milestone in style.

This year started off with Cara, the team developer in Harlow, meeting TV host Rylan Clark-Neal at the Slimming World Awards.

She said: "If anyone in Harlow is thinking of embarking on a weight-loss journey this January, Slimming World is definitely the place to be.

"Not only do we have five decades of experience helping millions of people to lose weight, we also have a fabulously fun calendar of celebrations planned throughout the year.

"We have groups all across Harlow and North Weald and a warm friendly welcome awaits - and obviously a cup of tea too"

The year will get off to a sparkling start, with everyone who joins Slimming World before Sunday (January 13) receiving a special golden New Member Pack, and the launch of a brand-new golden Millionaire's Shortcake Hi-fi cereal bar, available exclusively in Slimming World groups.

Cara said: "I'm so proud of my team of consultants and the difference they are making to people's lives every single week, they are always excited about sharing their members achievements, we also have two new consultants starting in January after losing a combined total of just over 13 stone. It's going to be amazing."

Later in the year there will also be exciting competitions to win golden prizes, special-edition publications, 50th birthday themed parties in all

Slimming World groups and more.

Cara explained: "While everyone else looks forward to Christmas, at Slimming World we always joke that we look forward to January because we love welcoming new people to our group and seeing them discover that they can lose weight without feeling hungry or deprived - and celebrating with them when they do.

"However, this year is more exciting than ever before because I know our 50th year is going to be even more special.

"Just like our founder, Margaret, back in 1969, we're on a mission to help people to achieve their weight-loss dreams.

"She built Slimming World on the promise of weight loss with no hunger, no judgement and freedom from guilt, and that's exactly what our members still do today.

"Our Food Optimising eating plan is based around satiety and energy density - eating foods that are best at satisfying your appetite and have fewest calories per gram of food - so you learn how to make healthy choices and lose weight - and keep it off - without feeling hungry.

"There's no such thing as a 'quick fix' when it comes to losing weight and Slimming World has always offered sustainable, long-term weight loss, so it's definitely the best choice for anyone wanting to get slim for life this January - and to have a great time in the process.

"We have an amazing team of consultants in Harlow who are passionate about helping people achieve their dream weight and I can't wait to see how many more people we can help in 2019"

■ More people in the UK and Ireland attend a Slimming World group every week than any other weight-loss group.

Town was THE place if you wanted a night out – whatever happened?

I GREW up in Harlow and was so lucky to have experienced a thriving nightlife here.

We had Chicago's, Jumping Jacks, The Square, Cms on most nights, the tapas bar and Seen nightclub was open from Thursday to Sunday.

What happened here? Other towns still have a thriving nightlife.

Harlow is now the town that time forgot. There is only one night club open and that's only on a Saturday night.

People used to come from outside Harlow to party here. There is nowhere to enjoy ourselves any more.

What happened to our nightlife? There is a university here. Surely young people want to party?

Why can't this town supply a nightlife, especially now they are housing many families from outside Harlow here?

If they are bringing in more people, they need to supply adequate leisure.

Is it that nobody can afford to hire the space to create night life? Is this why small businesses can't survive here? Isn't it about time that rent was lowered on property, so that the town can create a thriving nightlife again? People might be happier if they have somewhere to go out and enjoy themselves.

Church Langley traffic congestion

ALMOST every weekday, Church Langley Residents, (and anyone entering Church Langley) are faced with major delays getting out of the area onto the A14.

This situation has been getting progressively worse for several years, yet Conservative-controlled Essex County Council has done nothing to address the problem. Their inaction has resulted in residents now facing daily delays getting to work and problems getting children to school and pre-school on time.

Something really must be done; ECC and Essex Highways were consulted at every stage, even before the development was approved, and there is no excuse for their having signed off on plans which have clearly failed in such a short time. For any solution to be remotely future proof it must involve some alternative route, and be either a permanent 24 hour or time limited route out of Church Langley, to relieve the intense pressure on the current single exit from Church Langley, onto the A14.

Essex County Council receive 70% of our council tax revenue, and much of that is spent (or should be) on our road infrastructure, across the town and across the county.

To not be able to efficiently get from Church Langley to begin a journey to work, or to take children to school, is quite rightly infuriating many residents. Church Langley residents are rightly keen to suggest solutions to the problems they are experiencing, and I commend them for that, but it is Essex County Council who are failing the residents of Church Langley.

It is Essex Highways, and it is Essex Highways alone who must be charged with the task of finding a sustainable solution.

I also call on our current MP, Mr Halfon to add his voice to mine, and pressure the Conservative-run Essex County Council to urgently resolve this ongoing problem.

Hedgehog's recycling nightmare

RECYCLING is a good thing to do, but for one little hedgehog it resulted in a near death experience! Tania was checking her recycling box before putting it out for collection the following day. To her amazement she found a tiny hedgehog trapped in an empty cat food tin.

She immediately called her

partner, Jack, who managed with great difficulty, to slowly and carefully cut the little hog free.

They then contacted the British Hedgehog Preservation Society to find out what to do next.

Tinny, as she has since been named, was only 290g, hypothermic and desperate for food, being far too small to hibernate successfully.

She was also found to have lungworm and fluke, both of which needed medical treatment.

She is now recuperating at a hedgehog rehabilitator after her very lucky escape.

We can only imagine how many hoglets and other creatures may have perished this way.

People are urged to not only wash out their used food tins, but also to crush them, thereby ensuring that this near tragic episode may not happen again. Sadly, hedgehogs are in decline and our prickly friends now need all the help they can get.

Please see the Society website at www.britishhedgehogs.org.uk for more details on how you can make small changes to assist them in their plight.

YOUR EDUCATION NEWS

Performing arts are helping the 'superheroes' to smash barriers

SCHOOL HIGHLIGHTS THE MANY SUCCESS STORIES AND THEIR ACHIEVEMENTS

CHILDREN with special educational needs and disabilities (SEND) are turning their lives around through performing arts.

Students at Burnt Mill Academy, in Harlow, who find various parts of school life a challenge physically, mentally or emotionally are thriving through music, dance and acting.

Ben Eva, SENDCo and drama teacher, said the school is all about removing any barriers young people may have to achieve their potential.

He said: "It has always been known that children with SEND have hidden talents; to me, they are superheroes.

"Everyone has something, but it is knowing what works for that person. Children who are disadvantaged because of disability or need should not be limited in their ability to achieve greatness.

"It's about smashing through the barriers to learning and that is what we are trying to achieve through a variety of ways.

"Students with SEND could feel different, they could feel their condition is a barrier or it could cause them anxiety.

"Sometimes, looking different to others could make them feel they are not included in society.

"We use performing arts in a variety of ways, through performance or independent work to build up social skills in rehearsals or learning an instrument, regardless of any barriers.

"We see improved attention and increased engagement in school, as a result.

"They find something they are praised for and a place they belong. It's an opportunity to unlock a talent they may not have even known was there.

"It reduces social anxiety and builds resilience, self-regulation, motivation and independence."

Success stories include:

■ Dilys Cook, Year 8, who has anxiety. Mr Eva said: "Dilys is really nervous and worries about speaking to people. But, in Year 7 she took on a lead role in panto and in the summer performed in School of Rock. On stage, she has no anxiety - she takes centre stage and she owns it.

Dilys Cook, Year 8 is now a performing arts lead

email your news to community@hertsessexnews.co.uk

She is now a performing arts lead and attends drama club and choir. The anxiety is still there, but in the performing arts environment, she is fine."

■ Liza Berry, Year 7, has been diagnosed with ADHD. Mr Eva said: "Liza talks a lot and likes to rap, so we are channelling that energy into performing. She turns up every week to practise and is really good at it. Being new to the school, she can find it difficult to manage, but we are confident by focusing on her rap she will continue to improve."

■ Liam Cashman, Year 8, has autism and anxiety. Mr Eva said: "Liam had anxiety around school and sanctions, he was anxious about drama and about getting things wrong. We put him into a performance in drama and he started to like it. He is talented and now likes to show it and is building friendships that way. With autism, expressing your feelings can be a struggle, but he sees the performing arts department as a home and he comes to us if he needs support."

■ Emma Hua, Year 9, has a hearing impairment. Mr Eva said: "Emma started off nervous and shy, but through music and playing the piano, she has found her way and is quite sassy now. Her impairment has not stopped her ability to understand key features in music and she is on track for top grades in music. The one thing you need to be able to do to play music is hear, but Emma can feel the notes. It is magical."

■ Aleena Ghani, Year 9 has Down's syndrome. Mr Eva said: "Aleena was very shy in Year 7 and not very verbal. But, when she dances, she's another woman! She has been in every school show and is studying GCSE dance, whereas she can't necessarily access some other subjects. She has such a strong passion and can learn and retain a dance routine in no time. The subject has ignited the passion in her and it's lovely to watch her on stage. It has helped with her social skills and she will now lead a warm-up session, even though she can find that difficult."

■ Yoldas Soytoprak, Year 7, has Bardet Biedl syndrome which affects his liver and vision. Mr Eva said:

"Despite worsening vision which means he can only see 6m in front of himself, Yoldas wanted to take up piano. He's such a bright and happy young man and is just taking it in his stride. We have got him bright keys for the piano to make it more accessible for him as we will never allow a barrier to learning. We are making something that seems impossible, possible."

Mr Eva said: "For us, it's about changing the mindset from 'I can't' to 'I can'.

"It builds resilience and will reduce mental health and social emotional issues in the future.

"It feels lovely to see the progress they are making with us. It's about small steps and looking at the journey from Year 7 to Year 11."

Keen Year 6 pupils are given the opportunity to shine as leaders

YOUNG leaders have taken on new responsibilities at their primary school.

Roydon Primary Academy, in Roydon, has appointed Year 6 pupils as leaders across the school. Posts as leaders in reading, writing, maths, science and PE, as well as house champions, launched last year.

Keen pupils have this year gone through an application process, completing a form to outline their reasons for wanting to take on responsibility at school.

The ten subject leaders work with younger children, run the library and organise resources, while the eight house champions act as prefects, showing visitors around, helping in the lunch hall and being role models to their peers.

Head teacher Michael Clark said: "These roles are a way of teaching leadership skills and preparing our oldest pupils for secondary school, so they are used to leading something and supporting others.

You can't put a price on young leadership opportunities; it's a really important life skill to be able to lead others."

All leaders were presented with a badge during assembly after being selected by topic teachers.

Year 5 pupils from Roydon Primary Academy, in Roydon, visited Royal Gunpowder Mills

It's child's play for well-behaved Year 5

YEAR 5 pupils from Roydon Primary Academy, in Roydon, visited Royal Gunpowder Mills.

They researched the difference between the experiences of rich and poor children and the toys they played with and whether the rich had a happier childhood.

The class also discovered the history of the Christmas card and the origins of many other traditions, including the Christmas cracker and tree decorations.

Class teacher Molly Brooks said: "The children had an amazing time getting fully immersed in the experience, from playing parlour games, many of which were re-enacted at our Christmas party, and creating their own Christmas screen print card."

Head teacher Michael Clark was also happy.

He said: "It is so lovely seeing the children really enjoy an educational visit which provided them with so many learning opportunities."

"Year 5 were so well behaved and loved telling everyone about their day on their return."

Pupils maintain two-play tradition as part of Shakespeare festival

DOUBLE BILL OF BARD'S COMEDIES IS HIT WITH AUDIENCE

STEWARDS Academy took to the stage as part of the Shakespeare Schools Festival recently.

It was the 11th year that Stewards had been involved and, due to the high demand from pupils, it continued with the tradition of performing two plays.

This year audiences were treated to two of Shakespeare's comedies – A Midsummer Night's Dream and Twelfth Night.

As always, the pupils' behaviour was exemplary and SSF staff commented on the professionalism of both casts within the theatre, both on and off-stage.

Both casts started their journeys in the summer term when the pieces were auditioned – A Midsummer Night's Dream as a GCSE class production and Twelfth Night as an after-school enrichment activity.

The GCSE class came up with the concept for their performance and have taken on all positions of responsibility including student director, technical assistant, marketing assistant and costume/prop design.

Twelfth Night also had a student assistant director and technical assistant.

In October the casts participated in a half-day workshop led by two theatre professionals.

Audiences were treated to two of Shakespeare's comedies

They were able to explore the performance space, showcase their language and character skills and perform an extract of their play.

All the pupils fully enjoyed the experience and felt it helped to prepare them for the final performance.

One of the cast members said: "I am so proud of my achievement tonight. It is the first time I have performed on stage and I really enjoyed it."

Another cast member said: "I took part in SSF last year, in Macbeth, which was great."

"This year I feel so much more confident and I absolutely loved the audience that were laughing so much."

"It made me feel good knowing we had entertained them."

Di Johnson, head of performing Arts and assistant head teacher, said: "The Shakespeare Schools Festival is such an amazing opportunity for children as it allows them to grow in confidence, properly understand Shakespeare as a performance text, engage with pupils from other schools, work with theatre professionals and perform in a professional theatre."

"We are incredibly lucky at Stewards that we are able to continue with this sort of high-quality enrichment activity."

"The pupils gain so much from the experience as do the staff involved. Watching both casts on stage this year has reminded me of how inspiring young people can be and it has invigorated me on a dark November evening."

"I am so proud of the casts and look forward to working with them again next year."

Primary issues '50 activities' challenge to youngsters

CHILDREN are being challenged to complete 50 activities before they leave their primary school.

From riding a bike, playing a game of cards, sleeping in a tent, flying a kite, to hunting for bugs, visiting a museum and playing a game of cricket, pupils at Roydon Primary Academy are broadening their life experiences.

The 50 Things to do Before You Leave Roydon booklet has been given to all families, with the school committing to doing its bit to help children tick off as many activities as possible.

Split into place to go, places to visit, things to do and things to learn, the optional list is a way of encouraging families to expose children to as many learning experiences as possible.

Head teacher Michael Clark said: "The list is all of the things we want 11-year-olds to have done before they move on to secondary school."

"They are life experiences and involve a lot of outdoor learning."

"We have such nice outdoor spaces here; our old buildings are coming down, we have our adventure trail, pond with wildlife and allotments and we push for our curriculum to be taught outside as often as possible."

"We are committing to helping children to achieve half of the list while with us at school."

"We look after the academic side of their learning, but we also want to make them well-rounded citizens for a modern society."

"The list is a great prompt for parents. I don't think I've ever flown a kite with my own children, for example."

"The list has made me think I must do that and create those memories with them."

"We want our pupils to have even more to come into school and share with us."

"We also want them to turn up at secondary school having done these things."

"It's just a really nice list of things for children to do with their parents and to talk about."

"They love coming in and sharing what they have done outside of school."

Every pupil has been given a folder to keep tickets and photos in as a memory book of their activities.

Evening of celebration for class of 2018 at Burnt Mill

AN EVENING of celebration saw former students welcomed back to Burnt Mill Academy.

The class of 2018 – who left Year 11 in the summer – were invited back to the school, in Harlow, to collect their GCSE certificates, receive various faculty awards for exceptional performance in a subject area and special awards.

The presentation evening was an opportunity for former students' achievements to be celebrated and included two performances from Year 11 student band Monochroma.

Former student Maddie Leaddon, now a qualified doctor working in Westminster and Chelsea Hospital, inspired Year 11 leavers, parents and staff with her story of relentlessly pursuing a dream until you make it your reality.

She also talked fondly about her experiences at Burnt Mill and how the school had challenged and supported her to realise her aspiration of studying medicine at Cambridge University.

Awards each year are named after former teachers and friends of the school who return to present the prizes.

Among the award winners were: Elizabeth Slow who received the Margaret Chan Award for art; Matthew Winder who received the Renee Joyce Award for modern foreign languages; Siena Taylor who received the Fraser Award; Daisy Broughton who received the Tillotson Award for PE; Marlie James who received the Megan Hanks Award for performing arts; and Jesse Forson and Erin Clucas who received the Head Teacher's Award.

Laura McGlashan, head of school, said: "The evening was a wonderful celebration of students' achievements and it was lovely to welcome the class of 2018 back to school to receive their GCSE certificates which they worked so hard to achieve."

"The teachers, who presented at the evening, demonstrated an immense sense of pride in their students because of their academic achievements and because of the wonderful young people they are."

"We wish them luck and look forward to hearing of their future successes."

Butcher Mike gives students plenty to chew on in demo

MIKE WRIGHT, from Sheppard and Wright Butchers in Bush fair, visited Passmores Academy to demonstrate the craft of butchery to some Year 10 catering students.

They have been learning about food provenance – where our food comes from – so Mike agreed to teach the students in a very practical and interesting way.

The students learnt about the different cuts of pork, beef and lamb and the different cooking methods for the different cuts.

Food technology teacher Ms Jameson said: "It was great to have Mike in and to be able to spread the Passmores community ethos by building the ongoing relationship with Passmores within the Harlow community."

"In the Food and Nutrition department we feel strongly about supporting local produce and businesses."

Mike Wright, from Sheppard and Wright Butchers

"All of the meat Mike has in his shop is British and of a fantastic quality."

Passmores is looking forward to inviting Mike in again for further demonstrations and insightful talks about the industry.

Budding artist Henry gets calendar's pride of place

Kiddi Caru's 2019 calendar with a front cover design by Henry Grimley

KIDDI Caru's 2019 calendar was launched in time for the New Year, with a front-cover design by Henry Grimley, one of the budding artists attending its Harlow day nursery.

Henry won the honour in a competition run by Kiddi Caru, giving all the children at its nurseries across central and southern England the opportunity to submit designs for each of the 12 months of the year as well as the prestigious front cover.

All they had to do was paint, draw or colour a design on a piece of A4 paper, letting their imaginations run wild. Their parents then submitted their design to Kiddi Caru for them.

Nursery manager Louise Farrow said: "Henry was so excited when he found out that his design had been picked for the front cover of this year's calendar."

"He couldn't believe that he'd won when so many children took part, it was such a lovely surprise for him. His prize was a framed copy of the front cover to keep and a limited edition of Kiddi Caru's mascot Roo."

For further information about Kiddi Caru visit www.kiddicar.com or www.facebook.com/Kiddicar or call on 01279 626111.

Change of Policy on Bereavement Notices.

From Monday 17th December we are changing our policy on bereavement notices and when they appear in the newspaper.

Due to the way society today communicates and shares information through social media, almost instantaneously, we need to act and reflect on this change of culture by releasing our notices as soon as possible.

Traditionally we have held them back until the main notice has appeared, this will no longer be the case. Therefore all notices will appear in the newspaper at the customers request.

Also an online notice can appear the next day on the website rather than waiting for the newspaper publication date.

Another fine mess

John C. Reilly as Oliver Hardy and Steve Coogan as Stan Laurel in Jon S Baird's affectionate biopic of the comedy duo
ENTERTAINMENT ONE/AIMEE SPINKS

DIRECTOR Jon S Baird calls lights, camera, action on a golden era of studio system Hollywood in his affectionate and heart-warming biopic of the English and American comedy duo, who shared the screen for almost 30 years.

Penned by Jeff Pope, Stan & Ollie is a handsomely crafted valentine to a double-act, who earned legions of adoring fans with pratfalls and slapstick.

The film focuses predominantly on the UK leg of a 1953 theatre tour, which was dominated by Hardy's failing health.

A lean script replays some of the couple's greatest hits including the 1932 short film County Hospital, which finds Oliver in bed with a broken leg and Stan wreaking havoc with a jug of water, a bed pan and a bag of hard-boiled eggs.

These moments of nostalgic recreation are joyful and Baird revels in the connection between the two performers, convincingly played by Steve Coogan and John C Reilly, concealed beneath layers of latex prosthetics.

The film opens in 1937 California. Laurel and Hardy are two of cinema's biggest names but they don't command the financial clout of Charlie Chaplin, Buster Keaton or Harold Lloyd because they don't own their pictures.

The duo resolve to demand a better deal from Hal Roach (Danny Huston), who has them under contract, and subsequent wrangling for a bigger slice of the Hollywood pie creates a fissure in the duo's relationship.

Fast-forwarding to 1953, Stan and Oliver tour England with a stage show of skits that promises to let them "go out with a bang... in Hull".

Theatre impresario and tour promoter Bernard Delfont (Rufus Jones) is more interested in a "bright new talent" named Norman Wisdom than the duo, who have survived the ravages of time.

"I think it's wonderful you're still going," coos a London jewellery shop assistant.

"Rigour mortis hasn't set in... yet," smiles Stan plaintively.

Wives Ida Laurel (Nina Arianda) and Lucille Hardy (Shirley Henderson) offer moral support as the tour continues and Oliver's health suffers.

"You loved Laurel and Hardy but you never loved me," laments the American during one lively exchange.

As the title suggest, Stan & Ollie is anchored by Coogan and Reilly, who are fiercely committed, catalysing an old-fashioned bromance that ensures after Oliver's death.

They are almost upstaged by a tour-de-force performance from Arianda as Stan's wife, a Russian glamour puss of few words – most of them biting – who stands defiantly by her man, especially for a photo opportunity.

"Where do you want me? I give them my good side," she trills excitedly.

Baird's film repeatedly tips a bowler hat to its subjects, who got into one fine mess after another so long as it made the world laugh.

Stan & Ollie: The Essex connection

THE main focus of Jon S Baird's film, Stan & Ollie, looks at the tour the comedy duo did of English theatres in the early 1950s.

One of the stops they made along the way on their visit to British shores was at Southend where they had a week-long residency at the Odeon in August 1952.

The much loved duo stayed at the Palace Hotel overlooking the Thames estuary and Southend's famous pleasure pier. Stan and Ollie made many appearances in the town during their stay. Another Essex connection is the screenwriter of the new film is Jeff Pope who hails from Brentwood.

Laurel and Hardy up to their old tricks while touring England

Keira Knightley as Sidonie-Gabrielle Colette
Lionsgate Films

COLETTE (15)

BASED on a script by director Wash Westmoreland and his late husband Richard Glatzer, Colette lovingly details the true story of the French novelist, who challenged the supposed limitations of her gender in early 20th-century Paris.

Westmoreland crafts his pages of feminist history and creative endeavour into a handsomely appointed battle of words between Keira Knightley's dutiful wife turned trailblazer and Dominic West's egotistical and domineering husband.

The balance of power shifts subtly between them over the course of almost two hours, beginning with the discovery of one of his affairs.

Colette's spouse has the audacity to claim that he is genetically predisposed to stray from the marital bed.

"This is what men do. We are the weaker sex," he professes.

That's certainly true through Westmoreland's lens because Colette draws strength from the various women around her to plough her own creative furrow, sometimes against the grain of public opinion.

Knightley's moving, studied performance captures the tenacity of a fragile bloom, who grows to love her imperfections and thorns, and uses them wisely to honour the words of her mother: "Trust no one but yourself".

Sidonie-Gabrielle Colette (Knightley) marries well regarded author Henry Gauthier-Villars (West), who operates under the pen name Willy.

He is under intense pressure to deliver a new work but prefers to devote his time to dalliances rather than penmanship or his wife.

When Willy discovers Colette's gift with words, he encourages her to document her formative years on the page – with some artistic licence for colour – and takes credit for her first book, Claudine A L'Ecole.

The saucy tale of a 15-year-old girl's rites of passage becomes a sensation and Henry encourages Colette to pen further adventures for her heroine, Claudine.

Over time, she becomes frustrated that only Willy visibly profits from her ink-stained hours of toil.

"I need credit for my work," rages Colette.

"Without the progenitor, there would be no Claudine!" forcefully counters Willy.

The aggrieved wife refuses to remain silent and speaks out with support from lover, noblewoman Mathilde de Morny (Denise Gough).

Beautifully shot by cinematographer Giles Nuttgens, Colette savours the central character's metamorphosis, culminating in her crowd-pleasing years as a music hall performer, smeared with greasepaint.

Knightley and West are delightful sparring partners and Gough brings a slow-burning intensity to her gender fluid paramour, who wears trousers in an era of skirts and politely heaving bosoms.

HOTSEAT

Jack is very amiable, he's got charm but is a lonely character at the end of the day

Father Ted star Ardal O'Hanlon, 53, is back as detective Jack Mooney, in Death In Paradise. He chats to GEORGIA HUMPHREYS about the upcoming series

What can you tell us about series eight of Death In Paradise?

IT'S ambitious for sure. What I love about this series more than other series is the use of locations.

We've got some fantastic new locations – we shoot in the zoo in one episode which is great. The first episode, the murder takes place on a bus. The third episode is a lot of fun as well; a TV crew come over to make a holiday programme.

Is there anything loyal fans might be surprised by?

THIS series has definitely got a slightly darker tone. There are some really dynamic, very dramatic scenes, something you wouldn't associate with Death In Paradise.

It's got all the normal Death In Paradise ingredients, but it's got this other dimension as well.

There's also kind of a love story which is explored in episodes five and six.

What do you enjoy most about playing Jack?

I SUPPOSE what I like about it is the fact that (it's also the thing I like least about it) I'm so busy, because he's in pretty much every scene. You get to play a real range – you've got to be very hard and very serious and very assertive, and the next scene might be very soft and emotional, then you'll be playing quite a funny scene.

Jack is very amiable – he's got a certain charm about him, he's got a little twinkle in his eye. But he's a lonely character at the end of the day, and there's a sadness about him, and I really enjoy playing that.

previously played the lead in the show. Do you feel more settled in the role now?

DEFINITELY. Partly because I know what to expect from the very tough environment that we work in, with the heat and the humidity, not to mention the crazy weather and the creatures that you have to contend with.

It's a challenging environment. This year, I know how to manage my time well and my energy, how to live in a place like that.

What sort of reception have you had from fans?

AH yeah, people are generally very supportive, and people who I never imagined in a million years would be Death In Paradise fans out themselves! They seem to really cherish it... I hope they're happy enough with me! I mean, I avoid social media, I avoid press and reviews and press coverage of it. Ugh! You'd lose your sanity if you got too bogged down in that.

Left: Ardal O'Hanlon says he's adapted to filming in the climate of Guadeloupe. Above: With the rest of the show's cast

So you haven't got used to being in the limelight over the years...

NEVER really got used to it. I love the craft, I love the process, I love the preparation, I love the performance; above all I love the sociability of it, working with other actors and directors.

But I don't think a normal human being ever gets used to the other side of it, the attention, or anything like that. I've never actively sought that out, and I've avoided it if I could. It's never been particularly unpleasant or anything, you just want to live as normal a life as possible.

What do you miss while filming away in Guadeloupe?

SOUP. It's too hot to eat soup! Obviously I miss my family hugely [he has three children with wife Melanie], although they do come out for quite a chunk, and I'm in daily contact with them.

I miss things like bookshops. I miss the cinema. I miss TV. I miss my friends. I miss the dogs. There's a lot to miss, but you're so busy and you're so consumed by the jobs.

In the same way as Jack has to solve a puzzle, I have to solve a puzzle every day: 'How do I play this scene? How do I tell this story?'. So you've got so much to be getting on with that you don't really have time to pine!

How do you like to relax?

I DO cherish my downtime and I love it. Obviously, it's social – you've got a crew of maybe 70 or 80 Brits abroad – it's fun! You've also got the guest cast coming in which is a lot of fun as well.

I love the sea, so I love snorkelling, swimming with turtles. I also love the rainforest, which we're spoilt with as well.

Every weekend, you discover a new and wonderful magnificent waterfall hidden in the jungle with beautiful natural cool water that you can swim in, and cool down in. So, all that side of it is brilliant.

■ Death in Paradise is on BBC1 on Thursday at 9pm.

“You've got a crew of maybe 70 or 80 Brits abroad – it's fun! You've also got the guest cast coming in which is a lot of fun as well.”

SOUND OUT

It's been a real whirlwind since we performed at the royal wedding

The Kingdom Choir became an overnight sensation after singing at the royal wedding. Now they say they are hoping to inspire people in 2019, as ALEX GREEN discovers

Karen Gibson from The Kingdom Choir

WHEN life is tough, people turn to gospel. Just ask the charismatic head of The Kingdom Choir, Karen Gibson.

She says the healing power of music is needed now more than ever and there has been a resurgence in an interest in gospel music.

The choir came to public attention when they delivered a dazzling three-minute performance last May when Prince Harry married his American bride Meghan Markle at St George's Chapel at Windsor Castle.

Their unforgettable rendition of Stand By Me by Ben E King was watched by an estimated two billion people worldwide and proved life-changing for the group of gospel singers, leading to the release of their debut album of the same name.

Before the royal wedding, the largest audience the group had performed to was just 200 people.

Choir founder and conductor Karen says: "We never saw this coming. We never saw any of it. It's been amazing. It's been a real whirlwind."

The 55-year-old says: "It's an undreamed dream. It's a dream that you don't dare dream. Every day is different now, every venue is different, every performance is different."

Karen's crop of silver hair made her the recognisable symbol of the group, which counts about 30 members, but is flexible in number to suit the occasion.

She explains the Kingdom Choir existed for many years before the public sat up and took notice last May.

It follows new interest in gospel music which has seen grime artist Stormzy bucking expectations to release gospel and soul album Gang Signs & Prayer and the MOBO awards drawing more attention to the genre.

Karen sees gospel music's success as a sign of the times and says, when the chips are down, people turn to gospel.

She explains: "We are in a season when people need hope. They want to be inspired. People want goodness in their lives because there seems to be so much bad news all the time."

"People want love. They want to feel love and they want to be loved, and people also want to be free.

"I have also seen how singing frees people and how it creates great connection. People want family, and singing in a choir provides great family."

She started her first choir in 1994 with sister Kimmie and school friends Elaine and Collette in south London's Tooting.

Later, she went on to sing backing vocals for acts like Grace Kennedy and The Beautiful South and, until the royal wedding shot her to fame, taught in schools around London.

Following the wedding, the YouTube video of their performance has been watched millions of times.

They named their debut album Stand By Me after the song that changed their lives. It features modern covers of Bob Dylan's Make You Feel My Love, Coldplay's Fix You, Stormzy's Blinded By Your Grace Pt2, John Legend's All Of Me and Beyoncé's Halo while delving into R&B, soul and, of course, gospel classics.

It was recorded over two weekends and Karen says the studio time challenged the choir.

"We were very tired by the end of it but we loved it. There's nothing wrong with being intense and tenacious and intentional and purposeful. It's good for the soul," she says.

"It was a great time of collection and fun and great music, wonderful arrangements from our fabulous arrangers, and a lot of love, a lot of laughter, a lot of food and biscuits."

Karen is currently offering a daily dose of thoughtful mantras as part of The Kingdom Choir's Flash Briefing on Amazon Echo.

Love, Hope And Inspiration Daily can be heard throughout January and is aimed at filling listeners with hope and motivation for the day ahead ... or just make people smile.

Each mantra to kickstart the day is followed with a snippet of the choir singing.

The choir will be touring the UK from April 30 with concerts in cities and towns including Cardiff, Birmingham, Manchester, Liverpool, Leicester, Gateshead, York and Cambridge.

Karen's voice certainly holds a

Prince Harry, Duke of Sussex and Meghan, Duchess of Sussex wave after their wedding

preacher's power. The way she forms her words is strong and compelling but also soothing.

It's not hard to see how she inspires the rest of the talented singers - many of whom see her as a kind of spiritual leader.

Ayanna Mitchell, from Edware, north London, was among those who sang at the royal wedding and speaks of Karen with an almost religious fervour.

The 31-year-old met her at a New Year's Eve party in 2014. The pair discussed gospel and by the end of January she was part of the choir.

Ayanna describes Karen as a "leader, friend, confidante, spiritual mother" and says: "She wears so many different caps, and she wears them so well."

■ Go to kingdomchoir.com for more details about the choir, their album and forthcoming tour dates.

DIDO

HAS it really been five years since Dido released music? It really has, but somehow it feels longer.

The singer, who had her breakthrough with debut No Angel nearly 20 years ago, is back with her fifth album Still On My Mind in March.

Fans will no doubt be hoping for the calibre of songs from her earlier days, such as White Flag, Thank You and Here With Me. Dido recorded the album in the UK and it is a continuation of her long-standing professional career with her brother and Faithless founder Rollo.

AVRIL LAVIGNE

ANOTHER beloved early-noughties music icon is also marking her return to music this year:

Avril Lavigne is dropping her sixth record Head Above Water in February.

The Canadian superstar has long moved on from her Sk8er Boi days, and in its place is a new, grown-up version of this punk-pop vocalist.

She has promised an open and honest collection in this, her first album in half a decade following her self-titled 2013 release.

CHILDISH GAMBINO

MUSIC fans have waited almost too long for a new album from Donald Glover, aka Childish Gambino.

The American actor, rapper, record producer, writer and comedian has been teasing fans with a follow-up to his 2016 record Awaken, My Love! with a number of singles and EP releases, notably hit political track This Is America, and the Summer Pack EP in July, but an album has yet to materialise. While there has been no official mention of a release date, the record is easily one of the most highly-anticipated among hip-hop fans in 2019.

MADONNA

MADONNA is set to make an epic comeback at some point this year with her 14th studio album, which will reportedly be inspired by Portuguese fado music.

She is working with long-standing collaborator, French record producer Mirwais on her new stuff, after working with him on a number of albums. Watch this space, folks: the queen is back. Soon.

KATIE WRIGHT asks skincare specialists how to revitalise a dull, dry complexion

EXPERT TIPS TO DETOX YOUR FACE

AFTER December's boozy, party-filled weeks, many of us embark on Dry January, quitting alcohol, eating healthily and hitting the gym – hard.

Have you ever considered, however, that you should be detoxing your skin, not just your liver?

"It's common for people to overindulge during the festive period," says Tracey Wilmot, training and education director at Murad.

But, she warns, all those glasses of fizz and tins of Quality Street take their toll: "Excess alcohol and high-sugar foods can lead to loss of radiance, dehydration and a dull-looking complexion."

On the other hand, you might be seeing more blemishes or blotchy patches.

"If you're experiencing oilier skin, breakouts or the skin shows signs of redness or sensitivity, it could be time for a detox."

That doesn't mean going cold turkey on skincare – far from it – though there are some products you may want to ease off on.

Here are seven ideas from skincare experts to get you started...

1 Use a clay mask twice a week

"A GOOD clay mask can help draw the impurities out of your skin, unclog blocked pores, and revitalise a dull complexion," says Tracey.

"Look for kaolin clay or volcanic clay, which controls excess oil and deep cleanses the skin."

2 Drink lots of water – and eat it too

"DEHYDRATION is often the biggest culprit during the holiday season," Tracey says, "because alcohol not only dehydrates our cells but also causes blotchy red skin and exacerbates sensitivity and redness."

That's why it's important to boost moisture levels from the inside by drinking plenty of water, and 'eating' it in the form of water-rich foods.

"Eating water-rich foods, such as apples and broccoli, not only hydrates the skin at the cellular level, but also delivers the nutrients needed for healthier skin. Add lemon to your water for a good cleanse and to help digestion."

3 Take a break from drying products

"SINCE the new year will be the dead of winter for those of us in the northern hemisphere, most individuals need to add hydration and moisturisation," says Dr Gregory Bays Brown, founder of ReVive Skincare.

"As such, I would suggest decreasing the frequency of products that can contribute to drying, such as retin-A or retinol creams and peels."

That way, your skin cells can hold onto all that extra water you're giving them.

4 Declutter your skincare

"START by detoxing your products and make-up," recommends celebrity facialist and laser specialist Debbie Thomas.

"Check use-by dates and throw away out-of-date products, as they lose their effectiveness and have higher likelihood of harbouring bacteria."

"Then check if you have products you just don't use – they can either be used on other body areas, or give them to a friend who's more suited to them."

5 Add an extra moisturising step

"WE lose most of our hydration when we are sleeping, so it's essential to add a good moisturiser to your regime to help replenish and repair the skin," Tracey advises.

If you don't already use a serum after you cleanse in the evening, consider adding one that contains hyaluronic acid (an ingredient which helps your skin retain moisture), before your usual night cream.

Alternatively, a face oil can make a huge difference – all it takes is a few drops rubbed between your palms and smoothed over your face to get rid of those annoying flaky patches, without leaving a greasy finish.

6 Exfoliate gently

"EXFOLIATION is key to a good detox, stimulating skin cell turnover and unclogging blocked pores," Tracey says.

"If you normally exfoliate weekly, now is the time to step up to twice a week, to really accelerate the benefits."

"Look for formulas that have natural polished beads, such as jojoba, and a combination of hydroxy acids, to help condition the skin and restore that glow."

7 Don't forget SPF

"IT'S also important to not forget sunscreen," says Dr Brown.

He says even though the sun is less present, it can still have harmful effects in the winter months.

So, make sure a cream that's at least SPF 30 is part of your morning routine.

MICELLAR
WATERS

Elemis Advanced Skincare Smart Cleanse Micellar Water (200ml)

£26, elemis.com

FOR those who like to do a double cleanse in the evening, this is a great first step. It's lightweight and has a pleasant clean and fresh scent. The product is packed with skin-boosting ingredients like apple amino acids, rosehip seed oil, Indian soapnut, chamomile and rose water. It removes make-up and any build-up you have left on your skin after a long day.

La Roche-Posay Micellar Water Ultra Sensitive Skin (200ml)

£8, escentual.com

I HAVE used a few micellar waters and this has to be the best. It had no scent or fragrance yet just lifted make-up off like magical water. Even mascara and heavy eye-liner disappeared with little rubbing. Cannot fault it.

L'Oréal Paris Micellar Water Cleanser Sensitive Skin (400ml)

£3.99, Boots

IT IS hard to believe something so clear and which looks like a bottle of water, could remove heavy make-up but this does. Eyes took a bit of work though and a few soaked cotton pads to shift mascara. My only niggle would be my eyes stung a little.

Eau Thermale Avene Cleanance Micellar Water (100ml)

★★★★★

THIS did the trick when it came to clearing away foundation and did not irritate my skin, which is a bonus when you have very sensitive skin. However it wasn't quite up to the job with eye make-up and I felt the need for a double cleanse to feel really fresh and clean.

STYLE GUIDE

CAPED CRUSADER

The only outerwear you need this season - it's all about the cape right now, says KATIE WRIGHT

WHEN delving into the January sales, sometimes it pays to buy 'out of season', grabbing bargainous bright party dresses or end-of-line swimwear to stash away until your next summer hols.

But when it comes to this year's outerwear offerings, there's a certain type of coat that you should be making a beeline for - and it's not actually a coat at all.

Capes were big news on the autumn/winter catwalks but we've yet to reach Peak Cape on the high street (the puffer has dominated thus far). So if you snap one up now in the sales, you'll be both on trend and ahead of the curve - what's not to love?

According to designers, there are two ways to go. There's the structured, formal style, as seen at Erdem (brocade capes), Loewe (trench capes) and Saint Laurent (thick black wool capes). If you tend to favour tailored coats, dresses and heels, this kind of cape will slot right into your winter wardrobe.

Then there's the softly-softly approach: The snugly blanket wraps seen at Roksanda, Gucci and McQueen.

In check or block prints and with fringed or faux fur trims, these capes can be dressed up for evening, or thrown over jeans and boots on a chilly day.

One thing's for certain - capes and backpacks do not mix, so athleisure lovers need not apply.

A cross-body or top handle handbag works best - and don't forget your gloves.

Another advantage? With many capes (particularly buttonless wraps) coming in just one size, it's easier to find one you like in the sales, because you don't have to worry about having to hunt for your exact size.

And as it happens, lots of our high-street favourites are now heavily discounted. Here's our pick of the cape crop...

Hush double face cape £189; Izabella jumper £85; leather leggings £345; Avebury boots £230

The Kooples studded black biker poncho, currently reduced to £199.50 (was £285)

Dorothy Perkins check and stripe cape, currently reduced to £25.60 (was £32)

Zara cape with faux fur collar, currently reduced to £69.99 (was £99.99)

La Redoute checked cape £47

Lands' End women's regular wool blend hooded cape, currently reduced to £90 (was £180)

HEALTH & LIFESTYLE

Is drinking too much water bad for you?

MAX FREEMAN-MILLS EXPLAINS WHY OVERSHOOTING THE RECOMMENDED TWO LITRES PER DAY CAN DO MORE HARM THAN GOOD

MODERN health trends come and go, but one piece of advice that doesn't ever seem to change is that we should all be drinking as much water as possible. As it turns out, though, there are hidden dangers to this most innocuous of activities – the spectre of “water intoxication”, hydration's potential sting in the tail.

Headaches, nausea, fatigue – all of these symptoms are associated with dehydration but can also rear their heads if you're over-hydrated, as it turns out. The scientific word for the issue is hyponatremia but the condition is really rare, especially if you're not an endurance athlete.

What is over-hydration?

ESSENTIALLY, over-hydration is when you take on more fluid than your kidneys can process and remove. It can be dangerous and even fatal in the most extreme cases. “Watering down your blood [makes] it harder to carry nutrients, send brain signals and control the muscles,” says Harry Aitken, a qualified sports scientist at fitness company Auster.

Over-hydration can particularly crop up during exercise, as people try to gulp down the water they're losing through sweat. “People have a tendency to replace the water but forget the sodium losses,” say Dr Ricardo Da Costa, a nutrition lecturer at Monash University. Da Costa says that rehydration is all well and good, but without sodium to balance the equation, the change to the composition of our plasma can be problematic.

The risk of over-hydration is still relatively slim for most people, though. As Johanna Hignett, an

Headaches and fatigue are signs of hyponatremia advisor to the Natural Hydration Council, explains: “You would need to drink extremely large quantities, in the order of five litres or more within an hour” to be at risk of hyponatremia. In normal life you're unlikely to be chugging as much as that.

What are the symptoms?

HYPONATREMIA causes the sodium in your body to become diluted, and when this happens, your body's water levels rise, causing your cells to begin to swell. This swelling can cause many signs and symptoms, from mild to life-threatening.

A person who is consistently drinking too much water may experience nausea and vomiting, headaches, confusion and loss of energy. In more extreme cases, it can cause muscle weakness, spasms or cramps, seizures and can even result in coma.

Experts advise that anyone who develops severe signs and symptoms of hyponatremia should seek immediate emergency care.

How can you avoid over-hydration?

THE steps to avoid reaching the point of over-hydration involve some relatively obvious reversals of normal practice. If you're monitoring the colour of your urine, as some people do, you should be aiming for a light yellow colour, rather than shooting for as clear pee as possible – which many people assume means the peak of hydration.

Urine shouldn't be entirely clear and, if it is, you might be drinking more water than you need. Hignett says the ideal shade for most people is “a pale straw colour”.

People who drink too much water while taking part in marathons, ultra marathons, triathlons and other long-distance, high-intensity activities are at an increased risk of hyponatremia, so if you're rehydrating after exercise, consider taking it slower than usual.

If you notice yourself taking time to return to normal service after working out, try drinking a sports drink, as the sodium content can help you to find your balance again.

At the 2002 Boston Marathon, a study found that 13% of participants demonstrated the symptoms of hyponatremia, proving that, while serious results are extremely rare, the issue is still common – especially at sporting events.

There's a reason that daily water recommendations have both lower and upper limits, so you should try to stick to them in normal, day-to-day life. NHS guidance advises that we drink six to eight glasses of fluid a day, although food can also contribute to this total.

It makes sense, therefore, that drinking 15 cups of water a day might not be sensible. A safe limit is one litre of liquid per hour, as this is roughly what your kidneys are able to process normally.

Finally, it may sound obvious, but the body already has a built-in system to help you know how much to drink – thirst. If you keep drinking and never stop feeling thirsty, talk to your doctor, as this could be a sign that something isn't quite right. But, for most people, drinking until you're no longer thirsty, then stopping, will keep your levels in check.

The risks of over-hydration may be low, but it's worth knowing that the condition is possible, especially if you're a budding athlete with a marathon to run in 2019. With these tips in mind though, you should be safe from hyponatremia.

HOW TO GET GLOWING SKIN IN THE WINTER

Perk up your complexion with these skin-boosting saviours, says KATIE WRIGHT

WHEN the summer holidays are just a distant memory and sunlight feels like a very rare luxury, our skin can start to look dull and neglected.

Cold weather is harsh on the skin, and frequently switching from icy temperatures outdoors to hot, dry air indoors is a recipe for a dry, lacklustre complexion. But that doesn't mean you have to abandon all hope. There are numerous ways to put some zing back in your skin naturally. Try one of these glow-givers...

1 SHEET MASK

POP on an Aromatherapy Associates Hydrosol Sheet Mask, £42 for 4, for just 10 minutes and let its powerful blend of essentials oils and plumping actives deliver intense hydration, firmness and radiance.

2 COLLAGEN PILLS

FACE creams often contain collagen and hyaluronic acid but Ingenious Beauty Ultimate Collagen+ Second Generation, £42.99 for 90 capsules, gives you a daily dose of actives.

3 SKIN SUPPLEMENT

PACKED full of pomegranate, goji berries and chai seeds, Neal's Yard Remedies Organic Berry Blend – Radiance, £15.40 (was £22), is high in vitamin C, which helps protect your skin cells against stressors. Mix one scoop daily with water or a smoothie.

4 VITAMIN C CLEANSER

GIVE lacklustre skin the boot with Fresh Vitamin Nectar Vitamin C Glow Powder, £32 for 12 sachets, which is activated with a teaspoon of water to create an exfoliating, brightening foam cleanser.

5 CLEANSING BRUSH

UPGRADE your cleansing brush with the Foreo Luna Fofo, £79, Space NK, which connects to a mobile app to read your hydration levels and prepare a personalised daily routine.

6 NIGHT CREAM

COMBINING hyaluronic and lactic acids, MooGoo Natural Night Time Face Cream, £23.90, not only moisturises but also chemically exfoliates and promotes collagen production, all while you slumber.

7 CHEMICAL EXFOLIANT

(DCL/PA) Infused with a blend of five exfoliating acids, DCL Multi-Action Penta Peel pads, £58 for 50, Cult Beauty, are powerful enough to dislodge dead skin cells but gentle enough to use every day.

8 FACE SCRUB

FORMULATED with volcanic rock, the Energising Face Scrub, £24, from men's grooming brand Scrubd, sloughs off the dead skin cells that can lead to dullness and spots.

FAMILY HEALTH

Just give it a try!

WE'VE all heard it – and we've probably all said it – 'New year, new me.' And everyone's thinking the same thing. This will be the year we realise we have a hidden talent for long distance running. Or, this is the year the kids will suddenly develop the ability to pick up after themselves and do as they're told.

But the reality is, 2019 is simply a new number on the calendar. You don't need to transform yourself into a new person in order to make a success of this new year.

Instead of setting yourself impossible challenges to 'become' someone, or 'something' new, why not set yourself a challenge to try something new?

PUT 'EM UP

THE idea of boxing may not appeal to everyone, but it's one of the best workouts you can do, no matter what your age or level of ability.

It's a whole-body workout, gets the heart pumping and builds flexibility and stamina, all while improving your core strength and balance.

With glamorous celebrities such as Gigi Hadid and Ellie Goulding crediting the exercise for their sculpted physiques, you probably don't need much more encouragement to give it a go. The full-body workout will help whip you into shape and help you target any problem areas.

And with Tyson Fury's spectacular return to the ring in 2018, it shouldn't be too difficult to get the kids involved either. There are plenty of kids' clubs around – whether it's boxing or another form of martial art – which will not only help with their fitness, but with their discipline and confidence too.

Boxing for fitness doesn't have to take place in a ring, there are dozens of variations which are non-contact. Boxercise, Box Fit and Box HIIT classes all incorporate boxing skills and moves without actual physical contact.

And let's not forget the huge satisfaction which comes with throwing a punch – whether it's at a bag or mitt, or into mid-air – which will be sure to help unwind and combat family, life and work stress.

MULTI-SPORT

IF you get bored of one thing easily, or you've done your fair share of 10ks but don't like the idea of increasing your distance, then a duathlon could be a great challenge for you and your family.

A duathlon is a multi-sport event where you run, cycle, and then run again. The distances for each leg vary depending on the race.

It's not a new discipline, but it is becoming more and more popular and is hotly tipped as being the exercise of choice for 2019.

Give something fun and new a go and improve your health in 2019, suggests fitness expert RUTH LYNCH

Boxing is a fantastic whole-body workout for any age

Peer pressure in a gym class will keep you focussed on your goals. Or, left, why not make the most of those Christmas presents and get out for a family bike ride?

If you don't fancy something as intense as a duathlon, walking, running or getting out on your bikes are great ways to get the whole family's hearts pumping while enjoying some time together.

TEAM UP

EXERCISE classes aren't exactly a new thing, but they have seen a resurgence in recent years, with more and more people recognising the advantage of getting fit among their peers.

Peer pressure is a great motivator to keep going to classes and inserts a bit of healthy competition during sessions.

Whether it's been 10 years since you last put on a pair of trainers, or you religiously attend your local gym, mixing it up and taking part in new/different classes will work wonders for your health.

A single cardio class a week will get your heart pumping and burn off excess calories, while adding in a step, strength or HIIT class into your usual fitness routine will help you achieve an all body workout.

NEW YEAR BOOST

THE new year is also great time to take advantage of your kids' energy. Whether this is a run around the block, a short HIIT session in the park or a bike ride you can tire them out and reach your weekly fitness goals each week in one go.

If your kids were given a fitness tracker, scooter or new bike at Christmas, then incorporate their new toy into a family fitness session. Fitness trackers are a great example of turning fitness into a game.

A new year's resolution is a great way to set yourself a challenge, but over-promising or setting yourself unachievable targets won't do you any favours.

So, let your new year's promise be to get healthy in a way you and your family can maintain, take the opportunity to see what's happening around you, and find a new way to keep the wonderful person you already are interested.

MY TEENAGER WANTS TO HAVE HER BREASTS ENLARGED – SURELY SHE'S TOO YOUNG

Q MY 17-year-old daughter is obsessed with having her breasts enlarged, and won't accept she's too young. What can we do to help make her happier with her natural shape and stop her wanting surgery?

A NAVEEN CAVALE, a consultant plastic and reconstructive surgeon at King's College Hospital, London, and founder of Real Plastic Surgery says:

"When I see women requesting a breast enlargement, I often hear they've been thinking about this from a very young age – as young as 13 sometimes.

"Without a doubt your daughter is too young, and I don't know of any UK surgeon who would operate for cosmetic reasons at this age. I'd discourage surgery until about the age of 22, when they've started to settle into adulthood, and the breasts have stopped growing.

"Rather than trying to discourage your daughter, have an open discussion. Keep her on-side. She will be better off with your support – remember, all operations have the potential for complications, and not everyone offering advice may have her best interests at heart.

"Try to find out why she wants enlargement. She should only be having surgery to make herself feel better, not to compete with, or impress someone else. Think about going together to discuss options with a sensible and properly qualified plastic surgeon. Then, think together whether surgery is the best option – she may feel very differently about it in a few years' time, but if not, go back to your surgeon.

"When I see young adults, for example 18-22-year-olds requesting breast enlargement, I am happiest when they turn up with a parent (typically mum). They have often discussed things, and this is a healthy sign. They can also discuss things again after having seen me. I almost always ask them to both return to see me for a second time.

"I've also found those who wait and then proceed with surgery are usually happier with the results, perhaps because they better understand and appreciate the realities of what can be achieved. Realistic expectations are very important before going under the knife. Your daughter will almost certainly be better off waiting until she is a little older."

FOOD & DRINK

It's hard to eat healthy if you don't know how to cook

Inspired by his family, chef Tom Kerridge tells JENNY STALLARD why he's on a mission to wean us off convenience food

INGREDIENTS

(495 calories per serving)
800g baby carrots (assorted colours, ideally), scrubbed
1tbsp cumin seeds, lightly crushed
1tbsp Aleppo pepper flakes
3tbsp blossom honey
3tbsp extra-virgin olive oil
1 onion, finely chopped
3 celery sticks, finely diced
3 garlic cloves, sliced
1tbsp ras el hanout
2 x 250g packs cooked Puy lentils
2tbsp water
A handful each of parsley and mint, roughly chopped
150g feta cheese, crumbled
Sea salt and freshly ground black pepper
1 lemon, to serve

ROASTED MOROCCAN CARROTS

WITH LENTILS
(SERVES 4)

Season with salt and pepper. Roast in the oven for 20-25 minutes, giving the carrots a good stir halfway through cooking.

4. Meanwhile, heat the remaining one tablespoon oil in a sauté pan. Add the onion and cook for four to five minutes until it starts to turn brown. Add the celery and garlic and cook for another two minutes.

5. Stir in the ras el hanout and cook for one minute, then add the cooked lentils with the water and warm through. Remove from the heat and stir in half the chopped herbs.

6. Divide the lentils between warmed bowls and pile the roasted carrots on top. Scatter over the remaining herbs and crumbled feta, then zest over the lemon. Cut the lemon into wedges and serve on the side.

METHOD

1. Preheat the oven to 220°C/Fan 200°C/Gas 7. Line two baking trays with baking parchment.
2. If any of the baby carrots are bigger than the others, cut them so that they are all an even size, then place all the carrots on the lined baking trays.
3. Sprinkle the carrots with the crushed cumin and pepper flakes and drizzle with the honey and two tablespoons of the extra-virgin olive oil, sharing equally between the trays.

COOKING can often take a backseat at home. With busy schedules, the different likes and dislikes of each family member to contend with, plus the nervousness that the thought of cooking from scratch can trigger, it's all too easy to become a bit too reliant on convenience food.

It's a habit that Tom Kerridge is determined to change, however. With his new book and TV show, Fresh Start, the Michelin-starred chef is keen to get more of us back to cooking from scratch.

It might not seem easy, but it's key to a healthier 2019, he says. "It's quite hard to make that big step to lose weight and eat healthier, if you don't know how to cook," acknowledges Wiltshire-born Tom, 45, who famously shed 12-stone himself.

"A lot of the recipes are in there to get people just cooking again; easy, quick pasta dishes," he adds of his new book.

"Things like a turkey schnitzel with coleslaw. Things to get you back into the rhythm of being in the kitchen, but also, alongside the show, it becomes about family."

It's about building family life around food, notes the chef, who owns Michelin-starred Hand and Flowers pub in Marlow. "What it's done is encourage people to spend time together, and to spend time with their families and make it a hobby, to make food that tastes nice and the kids are interested in. You've got to start kids young, get them interested in where things come from."

Tom's own family inspiration just turned three years old in December... Since becoming a dad to Acey, his son with wife Beth, the chef is even more conscious of what he prepares. Although, he admits: "I have the same problems as everybody else. It doesn't matter if your dad is a Michelin-starred chef, if you want fish fingers for tea with baked beans, that's it. I've learned – and I'm trying to teach myself – that parental guilt is a massive thing that everybody has, so it's not just you.

"If they grow up thinking that burgers and takeaway pizzas is tea, then that's wrong. But if you show them how to make pizza; that's where you take control of that. You're putting the stuff on the pizza that you want to eat. It makes food fun, and that's great."

Tom adds: "There are lots of positive side-effects in cooking for yourself. You cook tea, it was delicious; how great is that? Rather than, 'I microwaved tea, it was all right'. That leads to a new mindset and makes you feel better. It's not like we're asking people to climb Mount Everest here. It's having a go at cooking."

GIN seems to have taken over the world. About three years ago I was pretty smug because I invented a gin theme in January and called it Ginuary. I'd like to think I was the first, but maybe not, as now "ginuary" is a thing.

But for you, my lovely people, that's a good thing, as yours truly is able to give you some gintastic ideas for the months ahead.

Jaisalmer Indian Craft Gin (£35.45, thewhiskyexchange.com, below) was released just a few weeks ago and it has a thumbs-up in my household. The gin is created in Rampur Distillery in the foothills of the Himalayas.

Seven of its 11 botanicals were chosen to represent several regions of India, and they include coriander, vetiver, orange peel and even Darjeeling green tea leaves.

RAISE A GLASS

WITH JANE CLARE

The aroma is complex, but juniper shines through, giving a traditional backbone to this interesting gin.

I was interested to read that Wiltshire's Single Estate Ramsbury Gin (£31.95, 31dover.com, pictured left) is created within a mini eco-system. The heat used to distil is generated by a biomass boiler fed by trees from Ramsbury's forest. Waste water is filtered through a reed bed which creates a wildlife habitat; and Ramsbury's livestock are fed bi-products.

Sip and know you're doing the earth a favour.

The gin is distilled with nine botanicals, including fresh quince. It is an elegant, smooth gin, and those quince notes are harmonious within a fresh, citrus nose and then taste moreish with spice and the ever-present juniper.

Over in Asda, Extra Special Triple Distilled Premium Gin (£16) is at the heart of the retailer's gin liqueurs, of which I may have partaken one or two sips over Christmas.

The gin came third in a Which? blind-tasting of gins under £20 so you don't really need me to add anything. But I will. It is fresh, crisp and as precise as a crystal cut glass.

Finally, The Infusionist Passion Fruit Gin Liqueur (£9.99, 50cl, Aldi, below, right) is a lush affair and the aromas are an indulgent fruit bomb of tropical fruit.

It's such a wow on the nose, you can easily forget to sip it. But not for long. Take that sip and the richness of the fruit is offset by a slash of acidity and the strength of the alcohol.

It really doesn't need tonic, just pour over a couple of chunks of ice. If you're feeling fizztastic add it to a glass of prosecco.

I'll feature a couple more gins for Ginuary before the month is out.

ALSO IN MY GLASS... Ooooh, the weather has turned hasn't it! I warmed up with a glass of red the other night and a simple beef stew with lots of mash. My wine was Tesco Finest Saint-Chinian (£7.50, 13.5% abv), a rugged, characterful and flavoursome French wine. It's a blend of syrah, grenache, mourvèdre and carignan grapes and has been partly aged in oak for six months. The grapes, the region and the oak combine to deliver a robust red with the signature earthy and herbal notes of the Languedoc-Roussillon region.

For the minted yoghurt (optional):

A handful of mint leaves

150g Greek yoghurt (0% fat)

METHOD

1. For the aloo, add the potatoes to a pan of boiling salted water and cook for 12-15 minutes, until tender.

2. Meanwhile, season the lamb cutlets with salt and pepper and place them in a bowl. Add the garam masala, lemon juice and oil, turn the cutlets to coat in the spicy mix. Set aside to marinate. 3. Drain the potatoes, halve them and set aside. Heat the oil in a saucepan over a medium-high heat. Add the onion and saute for five to 10 minutes, until softened. Add the garlic and cook for two minutes. Lower the heat, sprinkle in the spices and stir for 30 seconds, then add the tomatoes and 150ml of the water. Bring to a simmer, add some salt and pepper and simmer gently for 10-15 minutes until slightly thickened.

4. Meanwhile, heat a griddle over a medium-high heat. When hot, cook the lamb cutlets on the griddle in two or three batches for three to four minutes on each side, depending on thickness. Remove to a warm plate and leave to rest under foil.

5. Meanwhile, for the minted yoghurt, if serving, blitz the mint and yoghurt in a small food processor until smooth. Season to taste with salt.

6. Add the potatoes to the tomato sauce along with the remaining 100ml water. Bring to a simmer and simmer for five minutes.

7. Stir through the coriander and taste to check the seasoning. Serve the lamb cutlets with the Bombay aloo, and minted yoghurt if you are using.

INGREDIENTS

(575 calories per serving)

1kg butternut squash,

cut into chunks (about 2cm)

1tbsp olive oil

500g macaroni

Sea salt and freshly ground

black pepper

For the cheese sauce:

60g butter

60g plain flour

1L whole milk

1tbsp liquid aminos

60g Parmesan, finely grated

¼ tsp freshly grated nutmeg

For the topping:

A handful of sage leaves

40g sun-blushed tomatoes,

roughly chopped

50g fresh breadcrumbs

2tbsp pumpkin oil (or use olive oil)

2tbsp pumpkin seeds

Green salad to serve (optional)

METHOD

1. Preheat the oven to 220°C/Fan 200°C/Gas 7. Line a large roasting tray with baking parchment.

2. Place the squash in the roasting tray. Drizzle with the olive oil, season with salt and pepper and toss to coat.

Cook on the top shelf of the oven for 25 minutes or until the squash is tender and browned at the edges.

Remove from the oven and let it cool slightly for a couple of minutes. (Keep oven on.)

3. Tip three-quarters of the roasted squash into a blender and blitz to a puree; set the rest aside.

4. Bring a large pan of salted water to the boil. Add the macaroni and cook until almost al dente (two to three minutes less than the time suggested on the packet).

5. For the sauce, melt the butter in a large saucepan over a medium heat. Add the flour and cook, stirring, for one minute, then whisk in the milk and cook, whisking, until the sauce thickens slightly. Lower the heat and add the liquid aminos, Parmesan and nutmeg. Stir until the cheese has melted, then stir through the squash puree. Take off the heat and season to taste.

6. Drain the macaroni, add to the sauce and stir well. Tip into a large, deep baking dish, about 25 x 30cm.

Scatter over the rest of the roasted squash, the sage, sun-blushed tomatoes and breadcrumbs. Drizzle with the oil. Place on the middle shelf of oven, turning on the oven grill at the same time. Bake for 10 minutes.

7. Take out the dish, scatter the pumpkin seeds over the surface and return to the oven for five minutes or until the topping is golden.

CELEBRITY WELLBEING

I worry less about little things after Maddy's illness

As his memoir is published, Mark Austin talks to GABRIELLE FAGAN about war-reporting, his daughter's anorexia and how fitness helps his mental health

FOR more than 30 years, Mark Austin has covered some of the biggest news stories in the world for ITV and now Sky, and witnessed firsthand some of the most significant events of our times while working as a foreign correspondent.

The award-winning reporter – his accolades include five BAFTAs – has covered the Iraq War (during which his friend and colleague, Terry Lloyd, was killed by American gunfire), South Africa's transition from apartheid to democracy under Nelson Mandela and the Rwandan genocide, as well as natural disasters such as the Haiti earthquake and the Mozambique floods.

But the 60-year-old father-of-three, who lays bare his experiences on and off-screen in his autobiography, And Thank You For Watching: A Memoir, reveals his most traumatic experience was far removed from war zones.

It took place at home, watching his eldest daughter, Maddy, battle to survive the eating disorder and mental illness anorexia nervosa. At her lowest point, she weighed only five-and-a-half stone.

Here, Mark, who lives in Surrey, talks about the experience, looking after his own mental wellbeing, along with his journalistic career and why he has no plans to retire...

What's the event that's most shaken your world?

UNDOUBTEDLY, the toughest personal time was my daughter, Maddy, suffering anorexia nervosa. It nearly killed her. Her illness began in 2012 when she was 17 and lasted three years. At one point, I was convinced I was watching her slow, inexorable death.

You experience a lot of terrifying moments when you cover wars, but that was the most shocking personally because it involved someone so close to me.

How did you cope during that time?

I STILL feel guilty that I didn't understand what was happening, or that it was a mental illness. At first, I thought it was just a teenage fad and kept telling her to 'grow up' and to eat.

It was very difficult for several years and almost tore our family apart. I worked, because it gave some sense of normality in the middle of a nightmare and was a distraction, but I don't know if that was the right thing to do. I didn't know how to handle it at all.

You couldn't communicate with Maddy, because anorexia had its hold over her, controlled her, and was like a sort of demon within her. I feel so guilty for telling her at one point: 'If you really want to starve yourself to death, get on with it.' That came from complete desperation, frustration, being at my wits' end and just wanting the whole situation to go away.

It's a great relief that she's now at university, healthy and happy, and I'm incredibly proud of her for talking publicly about the illness. We made a documentary together to help other parents and highlight the lack of mental health resources needed to treat a condition which costs lives. We're so lucky to still have our daughter.

Has the experience changed you?

I'VE consciously made an effort to worry far less about day-to-day little things, which has come about partly because of Maddy's illness. I used to worry on the small stuff of life, say whether I was going to miss out on covering a story, or being in the right place to report an event.

I know now that, every now and then, big things will come along when you really have to be strong, and they are what's really worth worrying about and concentrating on. The rest, you can't control and doesn't really matter much anyway. There's a very good saying: 'Nothing matters very much and few things matter at all.'

My wife, Catherine, a doctor dealing with life and death on the front line in A&E hospitals, has always been very good at grounding me whenever I've got stressed about work over the years, by telling me, 'It's important but in the end it's only television.'

What was it like writing the book?

IT was very upsetting at times, but cathartic in a way to revisit memories of what I'd witnessed over the years. At the time things happened, I was lucky I was able to mentally file away in a box the bad stuff I saw.

The only exception was the Rwandan genocide in 1994, which was horrific, and as a father it was even harder seeing children suffering, maimed or dead. I know reporters who experience nightmares and flashbacks of that time.

The book proved to me that I hadn't processed a lot of what I'd seen, and I think it's been good for my mental health to finally do that. Frankly, viewers only see a tiny percentage of the sheer horror and dreadful things, because you have to self-censor on grounds of taste and acceptability.

You've been in some incredibly dangerous situations - what's kept you safe?

I SURVIVED, or at least have so far, largely due to an innate cowardice. I've found cowardice is a much better protection than any amount of flak jackets, helmets and armoured vehicles.

I'm not a naturally brave person, who likes covering wars and gets an adrenaline rush from it, so I decided early on I'd take risks but they'd be calculated. That's stopped me going to many places and doing many things in war zones, which has probably saved my life and the crew's.

Sometimes, of course, you get it wrong, and my biggest mistake was in Bophuthatswana, South Africa, in the months before Nelson Mandela was elected. There was rioting, and at one point I was marched into a field with a gun pointing at my head. I thought, 'What on earth am I doing here? I must be mad. I'm going to die.' In general and very worryingly, I think the world's a much more dangerous place for journalists, as they're now seen as legitimate targets by people such as Al-Qaeda, Islamic State and other terrorist groups, who view them almost as extensions of the state.

Will you retire?

NO, I'm still as passionate about reporting news, as I was when I started out in my 20s. News is an addiction, and working in 24-hour news for Sky is a new lease of life.

Although I'm 60, I feel the clock stopped at 52. I simply don't count the rest of the years. Running and swimming around three times a week helps clear my mind, and I play golf. I think keeping fairly fit helps mental health.

■ And Thank You For Watching: A Memoir by Mark Austin is published by Atlantic Books, £20.

DOCTOR'S NOTE

MILLIONS of people will be quitting the booze for Dry January.

The estimated 4.2 million going alcohol free this month can expect immediate physical, psychological and emotional benefits.

Analysis of more than 2,500 social media posts discussing Dry January talk about improved sleep, appearance, energy levels, weight loss and levels of self-esteem.

The study, published in the journal Drugs: Education, Prevention and Policy, revealed fundraising for charity was not a prime reason to take part.

Report author Dr Henry Yeomans, of Leeds University, said: "Dry January focuses on the positives to encourage people to become new, low-alcohol versions of themselves."

Also those people taking part in Dry January can expect to be drinking less six months later.

A separate study of 800 participants by Sussex University has revealed the longer effect of taking part in the abstinence challenge. By August the average number of drinking days per week had dropped from 4.3 to 3.3 while units consumed per drinking day dropped on average from 8.6 to 7.1. Seven out of 10 participants slept better and had more energy during January while six out of 10 had lost weight.

ROSS NORMAN-CLARKE LOOKS AT HOMES ON THE MARKET THAT ARE SUITABLE FOR FIRST-TIME BUYERS

7 Littlebury Court in Kelvedon Hatch

According to figures just published by the Yorkshire Building Society, the number of first-time buyers purchasing homes with a mortgage now represents half of the property market – the highest proportion recorded for 23 years.

And with zero Stamp Duty on properties costing up to £300,000 (or on the first £300,000 of properties costing up to £500,000), plus a wide choice of 95% mortgages – and not forgetting Help to Buy on new-built properties, it isn't hard to see why. So, with this in mind, we're taking another look at properties suitable for first time buyers.

Durrant Court is a landmark Victorian industrial building within walking distance of Chelmsford city centre, which was tastefully converted for residential use in the late 1990s. Fenn Wright are currently selling a good-sized two-bedroom apartment on the top floor, with an asking price of £220,000, allocated parking and the added benefit of no onward chain. Served by both stairs and a lift from the building's spacious communal lobby, the apartment is one of the larger designs in the development, and offers bright, spacious rooms. It opens to an entrance hall with a storage cupboard. The lounge/diner includes two tall windows, wood effect flooring and a storage heater. The bedrooms are well-proportioned, both offering storage facilities, and the accommodation is completed by a fitted kitchen and a three-piece family bathroom.

For sale through Hetheringtons John D Wood priced at £295,000 is a spacious, split-level character apartment in a landmark building in the heart of Brentwood, within walking distance of the station and backing onto the precincts of Brentwood School. Accessed via stairs, it offers an inner hallway off which is a study/bedroom two. Further stairs lead up to a main hallway, off which is the principal bedroom, a bright reception room, a Shaker-style kitchen/diner with granite work surfaces, and a Victorian-style bathroom with a traditional roll-top bath and high-level WC. The apartment benefits from large sash windows, a secure entry system and additional storage space in the loft.

Cross Gate Cottage in the hamlet of Rotten End near Shalford is a charming period property set in approximately ¼ of an acre of lovely gardens and surrounded by rolling countryside. With two bedrooms, two reception rooms and a conservatory, as well as a kitchen, family bathroom and utility room, it offers perfect living space for a young couple – or alternatively, those looking to downsize. Outside, to one side is a driveway offering off-road parking for several vehicles plus access to a double garage. The gardens offer a variety of mature trees, shrubs and borders, with a small stream running down one side. Cross Gate Cottage is for sale through Strutt & Parker with a guide price of £500,000.

On sale through Hilbery Chaplin for £270,000-£275,000 is a well-presented first floor apartment situated in a sought-after block on the west side of Brentwood and within the St. Peter's School catchment area. The property has undergone modernisation by the current owners with plantation shutters throughout, and offers a hallway with built-in cupboards, two good sized bedrooms with fitted wardrobes, a spacious lounge, a generous-sized fitted kitchen/diner with a range of modern units complemented by granite work surfaces and some integrated appliances, and a family bathroom with both a bath and a separate shower cubicle. There is residents' parking available both in front of and behind the block.

Beresfords are selling a number of brand new one and two-bedroom apartments imaginatively created within a former library building located close to the heart of Brentwood, and offering the last word in stylish contemporary living. The development benefits from an impressive entrance lobby, with concierge service, lifts to all floors, individual storage cages, private allocated parking and a 10-year warranty. Number 18 is a one-bed apartment with a high specification including a bespoke designer kitchen with integrated appliances, engineered oak flooring, recessed LED low energy lighting and built-in storage. Priced at £280,000 and being brand new, this apartment is not only Stamp Duty-exempt, but it also qualifies for Help to Buy!

Finally this week, Number 7 Littlebury Court in Kelvedon Hatch is a well-presented end-of-terrace house, which has been modernised to a high standard. The accommodation comprises two double bedrooms, an 18ft dual aspect lounge with French doors into the rear garden, an extended kitchen/breakfast room with fitted appliances, and a luxury family shower room/WC, while the largely boarded loft offers ample additional storage space. Set in a pedestrianised area, the property has its own separate garage and parking space nearby. The un-overlooked and beautifully-maintained rear garden measures some 30ft in length and boasts a rich variety of plants and shrubs. The guide price: £375,000, from Keith Ashton.

ENERGY FIRMS REINED IN

Price cap should go some way to preventing worst energy company rip-offs

After years of political ping-pong, the price cap for gas and electricity prices has finally come into force. It will mean millions pay less for power, preventing the worst energy company rip-offs such as pushing up variable rates for those who do not switch.

These tactics especially hit older people and the less well off. But a survey shows most people have no idea whether it will benefit them.

For whether you rent or own your home, it's not a guarantee of price savings. It will only apply to some tariffs. And many consumers could be lulled into a false sense of security - paying more than they should.

Some suggest suppliers will find ways around the cap.

The cap applies to "standard variable" energy tariffs. You can be on this if, like millions you have never switched supplier or reverted to this after a fixed-term deal. The cap generally does not apply to fixed-rates or green energy packages.

It should prevent the "average household" (a technical term from energy regulator Ofgem and the power industry) paying more than £1,137 a year. This figure will be revised every six months.

The next change - calculated in February and in force in April - will reflect price increases already in the pipeline.

Ofgem says the cap is good for the 11 million households - around one in three across the country - who have not shopped around and who have been punished for loyalty by higher tariffs.

It estimates typical customers could save £76 a year while those on the highest tariffs should be as much as £120 a year better off.

But according to a new survey from WeFlip, a switching service, only one in 20 know how much they might save while just one in four believes they understand how it works. The message from WeFlip - and other switching services - is not to rely on the cap to get bills down.

Gillian Guy, Chief Executive of Citizens Advice, says: "The introduction of this cap will put an end to suppliers exploiting loyal customers. However, while people on default tariffs should now be paying a fairer price for their energy, they will still be better off if they shop around. People can also make savings by improving the home energy efficiency with better insulation and upgraded heating controls."

Comparethemarket.com, says the average switching consumer pays £921 per year, £216 less than the cap rate.

Peter Earl, energy expert for the site, says: "We remain concerned the cap will create a false sense of saving and protection. It will also encourage inertia."

"The reality is shopping around and moving to the best fixed price deal remains the only effective way of keeping your bills low."

ESSENTIAL THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT THE ENERGY CAP

■ The energy cap is per unit of power. It does not cap your bill if you use more than "average".

■ The cap does not include standing charges or other fees imposed by suppliers.

■ The regulator says the price cap is a "fairer" price - not the fairest.

■ Ask your supplier if you are covered by the cap - if you are, think about switching.

■ Households on warm home discount deals and those with pre-payment meters can be affected by the cap.

■ WhichSwitch (switch.which.co.uk or phone 0800 410 1149) will be able to help.

New models for 2019

ELECTRIC DREAMS

Hyundai launches its Nexo in the spring

BY DAVID WHINYATES

If you thought 2018 was a vintage year for new cars, wait until you see what's on the way over the next 12 months. It's going to be truly electrifying!

A whole fleet of new mains-powered models are slated to hit the roads and, according to a recent survey, almost a fifth of British drivers will seriously consider buying greener, alternatively fuelled models in 2019.

Virtually every auto manufacturer will have something to offer, including a barrage of plug-in hybrids, a battery of all-electric models and even a new hydrogen-powered SUV.

So is this the beginning of the end for the internal combustion engine? Hardly, for although the UK's network of charging points is growing, petrol and diesel power will remain king until such a time as a proper, nationwide system is in place, particularly in rural areas.

Thanks to advances in battery and powertrain technology, however, many of the new EVs appearing this year will provide longer ranges than ever before and will prove more attractive to buyers.

The new, battery-powered Kia e-Niro, due to hit the roads in April, will cover more than 280 miles before needing a re-charge. It costs just under £33,000 after the Government's recently-reduced £3,500 electric car grant.

At the other end of the EV scale, the all-new Porsche Taycan four door sportscar, is due to be revealed later this year. Based on the company's Mission E concept car, it is being claimed to have a range in excess of 300 miles and is expected to cost around £60,000.

The two may be poles apart in terms of power, desirability and performance, but together they provide ample evidence of the rapid advances in electric-power technology.

In between there'll be plenty of other newcomers to choose from in 2019, both electrically and conventionally powered, not least of which will be the long awaited MINI Electric, the order books for which will open later in the year.

A new Jaguar XJ with twin electric motors is also on the cards, building on the massive success of the I-PACE, while Aston Martin is expected to reveal its first all-electric sports car, the Rapide E in 2019.

An all-new Vauxhall Corsa will be announced in the Spring with both petrol, diesel and electric power. It will share its underpinnings and powertrains with a new Peugeot 208 with both cars expected to be unveiled at the Geneva Motor Show in March.

Now part of the French Peugeot-Citroen (PSA) conglomerate, Vauxhall is taking advantage of PSA's expertise in alternative-fuel technologies.

That expertise will also be seen in a couple of newcomers from PSA's prestige brand DS. The new plug-in hybrid DS 7 Crossback E-Tense will arrive next Spring and the smaller, all-electric DS 3 Crossback E-Tense is due on sale in the Autumn and is expected to cost less than £30,000.

Over in Germany, the country's prestige car makers Audi and Mercedes-Benz will be launching rival battery-powered SUVs in the new year. The new Audi e-tron will arrive in the Spring, while the Mercedes EQC is slated for launch in the Autumn. Both cars are credited with a 249 mile range under the new WLTP test procedure which is designed to be tougher and provide more realistic fuel consumption figures for petrol and diesel cars and more accurate range estimates for electrically-powered vehicles.

Japanese and Korean makers remain at the cutting edge of alternative-fuelled technology and one of 2019's most significant newcomers will be the Hyundai Nexo which uses a hydrogen fuel cell to achieve a range of over 400 miles.

While Hyundai is committed to developing fuel-cell technology, the launch of the Nexo in the spring is little more than a dipping-a-toe-in-the-water exercise given the expected price-tag of around £60,000 and that there are few hydrogen refuelling points outside London.

A more affordable and practical option will come from sister company Kia which will launch a new version of the battery-powered Soul EV later in the year with a more powerful 64kWh powertrain and a single-charge range of approaching 300 miles.

Around the same time, Honda will reveal a rival to the boxy Soul in the shape of its funky-looking Urban EV. Details are scant at the moment but it is expected to have a range of around 150 miles and a sub-£30,000 sticker price. Next year will also see the arrival of a hybrid version of the Honda CR-V.

Of equal significance will be the 2019 arrival of a batch of hybrid-powered newcomers from Toyota.

A new Toyota Corolla will arrive in February, replacing the Auris, in hatchback, saloon and estate body styles with either 1.2-litre petrol engine or 1.8 and 2.0-litre hybrid powertrains. It will be followed in the Spring by the return of the Toyota Camry - which replaces the Avensis - and a new generation RAV-4, both of which will have 2.5-litre hybrid power trains.

Away from alternative-fuel vehicles there'll be plenty of tasty new conventionally powered models with cleaner and leaner petrol and diesel engines for buyers to drool over but, for sure, whichever way you look in 2019, the future is increasingly electric.

The Porsche Taycan is based on the Mission E concept car

TEST DRIVE

VW Caddy Life Max

TIME TO CONVERT?

BY DAVID WARD

CARS converted from vans have been around a long time and the early days models were in all honesty pretty crude with a couple of rear seats and panel glass windows thrown in as an after thought.

They were basic in every sense of the word but were functional for owners then who used them as their weekday workhorse before becoming the family transport at the weekends.

Times have changed of course and today such mini-styled people carriers are far more modern, fitted out with car-like features and the latest on-board technology whilst remaining practical and affordable to run.

The choice too is wider than ever and for those motorists who don't want a mid-size or larger MPV yet still want a bit of quality and extra comfort on board then Volkswagen's Caddy Life is one answer.

Yes, they are a bit dearer than many rivals in this sector – the Caddy Life range starts at around £20,000 through to topping £28,000 – but as with all VW cars they have that extra edge in terms of quality interior and finish and underneath well proven mechanical hardware from the group's workshops.

The Caddy Life tested here was powered by a 148bhp turbodiesel with a six-speed DSG automatic gearbox and offered as a seven-seater and it does fit seven people as encountered on test and yes the two rear seats occupiers were young children who said it was not claustrophobic.

This Caddy though is certainly spacious with loads of room and with those two rear seats folded down luggage space becomes an incredible 2,880 litres.

For the driver the Caddy naturally, because of its van origins, does feel a little like driving one with its upright design but with a considerable more amount of home comforts on board and of course with the high driving position gives excellent all round vision.

The diesel engine has already been well proven across the VW car range and in the Caddy it's responsive when demanded, exceptionally quiet for a diesel and economical too, returning an average of just on 48.5mpg, close to the official 55.4mpg.

With plenty of low down torque [i.e. pulling power] this people-carrying Caddy can easily accommodate a full compliment of passengers and in decent comfort too while for the driver it's very much like driving a

VW car like a Golf with almost an identical dashboard layout with sensibly positioned dials and controls, easy to read and with all the latest in-car technology with media connectivity.

As one would expect from VW there are plenty of safety features on board, like airbags and the like, while obviously bearing in mind the Caddy's van origins there's plenty of luggage and handy storage spaces.

As for the actual ride of this Caddy it's surprisingly good despite underneath having the traditional van styled rigid rear axle and older styled leaf springs rather than independent suspension on cars and you do feel the harder bumps on the road a bit more but it's not uncomfortable. Wind and tyre noise is fairly suppressed too.

It's always tricky for a motorist to opt for a van style conversion today but they more car-like now and have the same home comforts on board and always it's a question of having a dual purpose mode of family transport for many households.

The Caddy Life tested is naturally at the top end in terms of engine, furnishings and fittings and there are cheaper versions around but as always it's a question of horses for courses as the saying goes and at the end of the day down to household budgets when it comes to choice.

TEST DRIVE

Volvo XC40

SWEET AND TUNEFUL

BY PETER HAYWARD

DESPITE the fact that the latest diesels have emissions as clean as petrol engines, governments have not caught on to this and are looking to ban them from city centres.

In turn, drivers worried about driving one in the future are turning away from them.

Add the recently government inflated massive price difference between the two, and diesel sales are falling fast.

Of course, petrol economy has also risen dramatically over the past few years, with the car manufacturers looking to squeeze as many miles as possible from every gallon.

Volvo's latest S60 saloon, which is being produced first in the USA, does not offer any diesel powerplants at all.

And that despite the fact that the corresponding V60 estate has some excellent diesels available in Europe.

High riding 4x4s and their many front wheel drive brothers sold mainly in diesel form up to now.

But the multi-award winning Volvo XC40 is capable of 45mpg in its sweet and tuneful 1.5 petrol turbo form, and it is such a good car that I can see it becoming the mainstay of the range.

It's also available with a 2.0-litre diesel that's capable of 58mpg of course, and this one also drives really well.

But my favourite is the petrol because it's a delight to drive in every way.

The engine is willing, gutsy and tuneful, yet smooth, quiet and refined as well – just like the rest of this family-sized SUV.

It pulls beautifully in the lower five of the six speed manual gearbox, and uses sixth as a cruising gear to save fuel.

This engine is only available with front wheel drive and a manual gearbox, but almost all the other models in the range can also be had with four wheel drive (4WD) and an automatic 'box.

It seems that most buyers of SUVs are quite content with 2WD, which usually gives better economy and lower emissions of course.

There is a very slight thrum from the three cylinder turbo if it's asked to pull from under 1,500 revs, but this is a trait of many three cylinder units and most drivers would not even notice.

The XC40 feels great on the road, with very good grip and roadholding even in wet conditions, and excellent comfort even when driven along a poorly surfaced country road at speed.

It also soaks up the worst surfaces in town, and takes speed humps in its stride.

The best gears for overtaking safely are third and fourth which give excellent response from almost any speed.

Both exterior and interior are stylish and beautifully built, with soft feel materials all round the cabin, and plenty of rear legroom plus a very good size boot.

The high tech digital dash and standard vertical sat nav, climate and car function screens, both work brilliantly and other equipment, in Momentum Pro guise, should be enough for just about anyone.

This includes Bluetooth, LED headlights, rear parking sensors, cruise control, heated and electrically adjusted driver's seat, headlamp washers, active headlights that turn with the steering and a heated windscreen.

And as with all Volvos, it comes with a raft of electronic safety devices in the standard City Safety pack, including the ability to detect vehicles, pedestrians, cyclists and large animals ahead, and then alert the driver.

If the tech detects an imminent collision, it will even automatically apply the brakes!

If you're in the market for a smaller SUV, the XC40 is so good I would not buy anything else before you drive it.

and there is some corrosion on

Outstanding displays from gymnasts

Members of Harlow
Gymnastics Club

THERE were several outstanding performances from Harlow Gymnastic Club at two recent prominent competitions.

Five top squad gymnasts represented the club at the prestigious Quatro Cup in Wiltshire, competing against over 500 elite gymnasts from the whole of England and Wales.

Competing in the level four age ten event, Millie Lynch (ten) attained the gold award for beam, and placed ninth overall after earning top ten positions for vault, beam and floor.

In the same event, Latton Green Primary School pupil, Selene Virga (ten), secured the silver award for vault, finishing in 16th position overall, after placing sixth on vault and tenth on floor. Fawberts & Barnards pupil Lois Covill's (nine) turned in a dazzling performance to earned fifth place on floor and finish in 26th place overall in the level five age nine event.

There was more success in the level five age ten event where Miley Bex (ten) gained a silver award and eighth place on floor to finish in 20th position overall.

Also, in the same event, with top ten positions for vault, beam and floor, Ellie Hodges (ten) finished in 14th position overall, picking up bronze awards for both floor and vault. There was celebration at the East Region Levels Finals for Eliza Swanepoel and Lois Covill.

The duo qualified for the event following on from their medal-winning performances at the Essex county levels. Competing in Ipswich, the pair represented Harlow and Essex against top performers from Suffolk, Essex, Hertfordshire, Cambridgeshire, Norfolk and Bedfordshire.

Eliza (ten) won the bronze medal on floor, achieved top ten positions on all disciplines to finish in sixth place overall. Lois (nine) scored top ten positions for beam and floor to finish in 12th place overall.

Club co-owner and head girls' coach Gordon Mitchell said: "There were some excellent routines from these gymnasts at two high-level competitions - we couldn't expect anything more from them, they've done us proud."

Hawks held to goalless draw

HARLOW Town saw their two game losing streak in the Bostik League Premier Division halted, as they earned a share of the spoils in a goalless draw at Corinthian Casuals on Saturday.

The Hawks were reduced to ten men after just 17 minutes when Taylor Hastings denied Gabriel Odunaiké with a clear goal-scoring opportunity.

However, Harlow's defensive resilience, coupled with Casuals inability to create clear-cut chances, meant this match was only ever destined for a scoreless draw.

Hastings' sending off set the tone for the rest of the afternoon - a lofted through ball saw Odunaiké sprint through on goal and his defender inadvertently tripped the forward, leaving referee Hugh Gilroy no option but to show red.

There wasn't much action in either box and in the second half saw one-way traffic for the hosts as the extra man told, but they weren't able to score.

This Saturday, Harlow host Haringey Borough.

Medals galore for Harlow judo stars

A TEAM of six young players from Harlow Judo Club travelled to the University of East London to compete in the London Area Grade Banded competition.

The young Harlow squad was represented by Millie Morgan, aged nine, Owen Lambert (13), Sorin Petrica (13), George Franks (12), Eli Bal-ski (nine) and Sam Cobbin-Brown (11). Five players fought in the Novice to 6th Mon (yellow belt) group and one player fought in the orange and green belt group.

Millie was up first in the girls section and fought magnificently in her weight group and was up against other red belts (up to 3rd Mon). She won all her fights by waza-ari throw and hold and make a clean sweep of her category to take the club's first gold medal.

For the boys, Eli was also competing against other red belts. He lost his first fight, won his second but unfortunately was beaten in his third to drop him out of medal contention.

Franks went up a weight group and competed in the yellow belt section (up to 6th Mon).

Like Millie, he won the majority of his fights by waza-ari throw and hold to take him through to the final.

Here, he was up against a slightly stronger player who outfought him and he had to settle for the silver medal.

Petrica was the team's next competitor in the red belt section. Despite losing his first contest, he managed to win his next fight, but despite battling hard, wasn't able to win his final round and took a well earned bronze.

Cobbin-Brown was the last player in the yellow belt section. He won all his four fights in great style by Ippon (maximum score) to secure the club's second gold medal of the day.

Lamberty competed in the orange and green Belt category. His quick thinking display of judo together with great ne-waza (ground work) during his four fights saw him take the club's third gold medal medal and showed great judo techniques.

Coach Mick Ellis said: "I am very pleased with the team's performance - they all fought very well and listened to my instructions."

"However, there are some areas to work on - there's always room for improvement."

Millie also competed in the Micklefield Judo green belt and under competition held in High Wycombe. She won a gold in the U36kg category where she was competing with five other girls from a mixed group including yellow belts (up to 6th Mon).

Being only a 2nd mon herself, she faced heavier competitors from the under-represented U40kg section.

Millie won all five of her fights, two with an Ippon score and three by partial scores and hold downs.

The gold medal match, against another fighter who had beaten Millie on four previous occasions, was a particularly impressive win.

It lasted just ten seconds as Millie performed a huge counter throw from her opponent's first attack to score a dramatic Ippon and take the contest.
